The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,

He sees now vainly make to his retreat.

Dryden, Tyrant. Lov.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The old man's god, his gold, has won upon her.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσή ἀποδότης; and “animamque meresque aureos educit in astra.” Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. A flower.

Jalousie,

That wered of yelwe goides a gerlond.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

The crimsin darnell flower, the bluebottle, and gold,

Which, though esteem'd but weeds, yet for their dainty hews

And for their scent not ill, they for this purpose use.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

- GOLD of Pleasure. n. s. [myagram.] A plant.

- GO'LDBEATEN.* adj. [gold and beat.]

Gilded; covered with gold.

In many gay garments that weren goldbeaten.

Pierce, Ploughman's Crede.

- GO'LDBEATER. n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition.

Boyle.

- GO'LDBEATER'S Skin. n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice.

Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

- GO'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,

Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- GOL'DEN.† adj. [Sax. golden.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

The golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.

Dan. iii. 5.

O would to God that the inclusive verge

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,

Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.

Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shaks.
'Tis better to be lowly born

Than wear a golden sorrow. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crashaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rusting hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have brought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call gryden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others, as we would have others deal with us.

Watts, Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

GO'LDEN Number. n. s.

The number, which shews the year of the moon's cycle.

This was invented, long before our Saviour's nativity, by Meton the Athenian, from whence it was styled the Metonic cycle; till afterwards it changed its name, being either from its great usefulness in ascertaining the moon's age, or else from its being written in letters of gold, called the golden number; though sometimes, for the first of these reasons, it is called the cycle of the moon.

Wheatly on the Common Prayer.

GO'LDEN Rod.* n. s.

[virga aurea.] A plant.

GO'LDEN Rule.* n. s.

In arithmetick, the Rule of Three, or Rule of Proportion.

An herb.

GO'LDENLY. adv.

[from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

GO'LDFINCH. n. s.

[golbfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a prout taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, raddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.

Dryden.

GO'LDFINDER. n. s.

[gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty kates.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd 'his vitals through a quill;
Unouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders.

Swift.

GO'LDHAMMER. n. s.

A kind of bird. Dict.

GO'LDING. n. s.

colour; glue used by gilders.

The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsiz, and other colours. Peacham on Drawing.

GO'LDSMITH.† n. s.

[Sax. golbmið.]
1. One who manufactures gold.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Shaks.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.

They [bankers] were a tribe that had risen and grown up in Cromwell's time, and never were heard of before the late troubles, till when the whole trade of money had passed through the hands of the scriveners: they were for the most part goldsmiths, men known to be so rich, and of so good reputation, that all the money of the kingdom would be trusted or deposited in their hands. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 597.

The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

Borrowed 500l. of a goldsmith upon my ticket.

Spectator, vol. ix. (1715), No. 14.

GO'LDYLOCKS.† n. s.

[coma aurea, Latin.]
A plant.

Fair ox-eye, goldyllocks, and columbine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

GOLF.* n. s.

[Dutch and Sw. kolf, a club;
kolf is also a Dutch game played in an enclosed area with clubs and balls.] A game played with a ball and a club or bat; formerly called bandy-ball. It consists in driving the ball from one hole to another; and he who drives his ball into the hole with the fewest strokes, is the winner. It is a common game in Scotland: See Dr. Jamieson's Etym.
Scot. Dict. in V. GOLF. Strutt says, that it is also used in the north of England.

Golf was a fashionable game among the nobility at the commencement of the seventeenth century, and it was one of the exercises with which prince Henry, eldest son to James the first, occasionally amused himself.

Strutt, Sports and Pastimes of the People of Eng.

Golf and foot-ball appear to have been prohibited in Scotland by King James the second in 1457.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GOLL.† n. s.

[corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence pealban, to handle or manage. Dr. Johnson.—
May it not be a more easy corruption of the Greek γύαλον, (gualon), the palm of the hand?] Hands; paws; claws. Used in contempt.

They set hands, and Mopsa put her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre-eminence.

Sidney.

Make 'em hold up their spread golls.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Wish her

To wash her hands in bran or flour;
And do you, in like manner, scour
Your dirty golls. Cotton, Virg. B. 4.

GO'LO'RE.* n. s.

[Irish, gleire, plenty, a great deal; Gael. leor, go leoir, enough;
Shaw; glorre, Scottish; Jamieson in V.
GLORE.] Abundance. Still used in many parts of England. See also GLORE.

GOM.* n. s.

[Goth. guma, Sax. guma;
Germ. gomo, a man.] A man. Obsolete.

I Gloton, quod the gome, giltye me yelde,
That I have trespassed with tong.

P. Ploughman's Vision.

This term remained on the English stage till the time of Charles the first. It occurs in The Widow, which was acted in that reign with much applause.

Rich. Say you, sir? —
I'll try your ladyship, faith. — Lady, well met.

Fran. I do not think so, sir.

Rich. A scornful gom.

On which passage the commentator observes,
(Old Pl. vol. xii. p. 245.) that Junius in his Etymo-logicon says, that gom or gome signifies a man.

Richardo therefore means, that Francisco, in his assumed character of a woman, acts not with the softness and delicacy of a female, but with the scorn and haughtiness of a male.

Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 355.

GO'MAN.* n. s.

[from gom.] A man,
simply; not a goodman, an householder,
a master of a family, as Verstegan, Bailley, and others have asserted. Obsolete.

From this name for man under the form of gm, gom, gome, &c. the etymologists have rightly derived gommán, which some have idly conceived to be quasi goodman. Whiter.

GOME.† n. s.

The black grease of a cartwheel. Dr. Johnson thus gives this word, without any etymology, from Bailley. It is probably a corruption of coom. See COOM.

GOMPHO'SIS.† n. s.

[Gr. γύμφωσις,
from γύμφο, a nail; old French, gom-phose. Cotgrave.] A particular form of articulation.

Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman.

GO'NDOLA.† n. s.

[gondole, French;
gondola, Ital. and low Lat. navetāda, Græcobarb. a kind of little vessel, "ex idiomate Italico, gondola." Meursius.
Some derive it from the Gr. κάνδη, a sort of vase.] A boat much used in Venice;
a small boat.

He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondoley, bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly.

Spenser, F. Q.

In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorosa Jessica. Shakspeare.

As with gondolas and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice
Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLIER.† n. s.

[Fr. gondolier, Cot-grave; gondoliere, Ital.] A boatman;
one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor.

Shakspeare, Othello.

GONE. part. preter.

[from go. See TO GO.]

1. Advanced; forward in progress.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mortimer.

The observer is much the briskest of the two, and, I think, farther gone of late in lies and impudence than his Presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.

He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister: we are gone else. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

3. Past.

4. Lost; departed.

When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas. Acts, xvi. 19.

Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone. Holder.

5. Dead; departed from life.

I mourn Adonis dead and gone. Oldham.
A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone. Addison on Italy.

GONFALON.† } n. s. [gonfanon, Fr. gunfana, Icelandic, from gunn, a battle, and fani, a flag. Lye. Dr. Johnson. — Our old word is gonfanon, which Chaucer uses. Milton introduced gonfalon into our language immediately from the Italian gonfalone, which is a chief standard, the name of the pope's standard, and often occurs in Ariosto. The gonfanon is described by the French as a little square flag, or penon, at the end of a lance.] An ensign; a standard.

He that bare the ensigne Of worship, and the gonfalon.

Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1201.
Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advance'd, Standards and gonfals, 'twixt van and rear, Stream in the air. Milton, P. L.

GONFALONIER.* n. s. [old Fr. gonfalonier, and gonfanonnier; Ital. gonfaloniere.] A chief standard-bearer.

Had she not [Florence] her private councils debating, her great council resolving, and her magistrates executing? Was not the rotation too provided for by the annual election of her gonfalonier?

Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, (1659), ch. 10.

GONG.* n. s.

1. A draught, or privy; a jakes. [Sax. gaug, gaug, a passage.] Obsolete. Huloet.

A commune gong, whereas men purge their ordure. Chaucer, Pars. Tale.

2. An instrument of a circular form, made of brass, which the Asiatics strike with a large wooden mallet; the sound of which is heard at a great distance. It has been introduced into this country in some of the entertainments of the stage and of country fairs.

The Chinese believe that during eclipses of the sun and moon these celestial bodies are attacked by a great serpent, to drive away which they strike their gongs or brazen drums.

Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 29.

GONIOMETER.* n. s. [Fr. goniometre, from the Gr. gonia, an angle, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring angles.

GONIOMETRICAL.* adj. See GONIOMETER. Goniometrical lines are lines used for measuring or determining the quantity of angles. Such are sines, tangents, secants, &c. Chambers.

GONORRHOEA.* n. s. [γῶνος and ῥεω.] A morbid running of venereal hurts.

Rauly mummy or stone mummy grows on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhoeas.

Woodward on Fossils.

A universe of death! which God by curse Created evil; for evil only good. Milton, P. L.
Resolv'd

From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good. Dryden, Fab. Spectator.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

The very foundation of poetry is good sense, if we may allow Horace to be a judge of the art. Addison, Tatler, No. 240.

Ah! ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast, Nor in the crick let the man be lost!
Good nature and good sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive divine. Pope.

2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state: amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar.

If you think good, give Martius leave. Bacon.
It was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Sussex. Clarendon.

3. Conducive to happiness.

It is not good that the man should be alone. Gen. ii. 18.

We may as well pretend to obtain the good which we want without God's assistance, as to know what is good for us without his direction.

Bp. Smaulridge, Sermon.

4. Uncorrupted; undamaged.

He also battered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts, that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

5. Wholesome; salubrious.

Awaits the good, the rest what punishment.
Milton, P. L.

The only Son of light
In a dark age, against example good,
Against allurement. Milton, P. L.

Such follow him, as shall be registered
Part good, part bad, of bad the larger scroll. Milton, P. L.

Grant the bad what happiness they would,
One they must want, which is to pass for good. Pope.

Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer
breath,
When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood. Pope.

No farther intercourse with heav'n had he,
But left good works to men of low degree. Harte.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being so turned in her, that where at first liking her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners. Sidney.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. St. Luke, ii. 14.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin. Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;
Good nature now and passion strive,
Which of the two should be above,
And laws unto the other give. Suckling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men. Decay of Piety.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,
'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,
'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd. Denham.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natur'd to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man. Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant world has thought otherwise. Dryden.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use. Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionate good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution? Sprat.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind. Calamy, Serm.

A cheerful temper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful, and wit good natur'd. Addison, Tatler, No. 192.

How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,
And drive him from you with so stern an air? Addison, Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

Even in the soul of sound good fellowship. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Excellent sir, I know you use to sip
Much of the Muses' fair good fellowship. Jordan's Poems.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow, in his youth. Arbuthnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill, Dr. Johnson says. Yet both the examples imply merely an husband.

See GOODMAN.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison, Spect.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath and willing by good will, obeyed. Sidney.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it. Temple.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies;
And diligence shall give what age denies. Dryden, Fob.

31. In Good sooth. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light. Shakspeare.

32. In Good time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools. Collier on Human Reason.

33. In Good time. Opportunely.

Pr. Fye, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell us whether they will come or no. Buck. And in good time here comes the sweating lord. Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

34. In Good time. A colloquial expression for time enough; as, we are in good time for the occasion.

35. Good [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given. Bacon, Hen. VII.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dragons, which were placed there to make good their retreat. Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to this household. Sprat.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues;
As honour made him first the danger choose,
So still he makes it good on virtue's score. Dryden.

36. Good [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual accession. Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good. Smalbridge.

37. Good [To make.] To perform.

While she so far extends her grace,
She makes but good the promise of her face. Waller.

38. Good [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another. L'Estrange.

GOOD.† n. s.
1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us.

Tit. Andronicus.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me.

Shakespeare, Mids. Night Dr.

He wav'd indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Love with fear the only God,

Merciful over all his works, with good

Still overcoming evil.

Milton, P. L.

God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,

Which he hath sent propitious, some great good

Presaging.

Milton, P. L.

Nature in man's heart her laws doth pen,

Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will.

Davies.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil.

Wilkins.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us: or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil.

Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,

And for the church's good defer thy own.

Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them good,

As bodies perish through excess of blood.

Pope.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force.

Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd

Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature

Unto the good, not ruin, of the state.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all.

L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil, and do good.

Psaln xxxiv. 14.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify; but no good, no not a purposed good, can make evil good.

Holyday.

O sons, like one of us is man become,

To know both good and evil, since his taste

Of that defended fruit, but let him boast

His knowledge of good lost, and evil got,

Happier had it suffic'd him to have known

Good by itself, and evil not at all.

Milton, P. L.

Empty of all good, wherein consists

Woman's domestic honour, and chief praise.

Milton, P. L.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum honestum ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here.

South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight

For virtue, valour, and for noble blood

Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good.

Dryden.

5. Property. See GOODS. Not now in use.

Farewel my good, for it is all ago.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold.

1 Chron. xxix. 3.

6. That which is right and fit. See the second sense of the adjective.

In word and deed that shew'd great modesty, And knew his good to all of each degree.

Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 7.

7. Good placed after had, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Goon, adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.

South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.

L'Estrange.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. Reasonably; as, good cheap. See CHEAP.

Victuals shall be so good cheap upon earth, that they shall think themselves to be in good case.

2 Esdr. xvi. 21.

3. As GOOD. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,

As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.

Milton, P. L.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?

L'Estrange.

GOOD. interj. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

To GOOD,* v. a. [Su. Goth. goeda.] To manure.

A fruitful hill not by nature, but by grace: nature was like itself in it, in the world: God hath taken it from the barren downs, and gooded it.

Bp. Hall, Fast Sermon. (1628.)

The husbandman looks not for a crop in the wild desert; but where he hath gooded, and plowed, and eared, and sown, why should he not look for an harvest?

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 121.

GOOD-BRE'EDING,* n. s. Elegance of manners derived from a good education. See the nineteenth sense of the adjective Good.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron. Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose. Shakspeare.

GOO'SBERRY.† n. s. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce. Dr. Johnson. — This may surely be termed a ludicrous etymology. Yet Mr. Pegge, noticing the Latin word for a gooseberry, viz. grossula, (and he might have added our northern word groser), says, it is certainly big, or great, in comparison with the currant or currant-berry, as they call it in Kent; wherefore it may be a corruption of grosberry, which would be more easily received on account of its use as the sauce already named! Anonym. Cent. viii. 79.—I think the goss-sauce may be easily given up, if it be only observed that goss is another word in our language for gorse, or furze, which has prickles like the gooseberry-tree; goppe, Saxon, the blackberry bush; and thus gooseberry may be goss berry or thorn berry. See Goss.] A berry and tree. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The large manured gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry. 5. Proud; testy; peevish; apt to take exceptions. North. Ray, and Grose.

GOORBELLY.† n. s. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gorman or gorman's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man. Sherwood.

The belching gorbelly hath well nigh killed me.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, v. 2.

GOORBELLIED.† adj. [from gorbelly. It is sometimes written gorrel-bellied; and in Derbyshire gorrel-bellied is spoken for pot-bellied.] Fat; bigbellied; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are you undone?
No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Gorrel-bellied Bacchus, gyant-like,
Bestrid a strong-beere barrel.

Old Song of Tom of Bedlam.

GORCE.* n. s. [Norm. Fr. gor.] A pool of water to keep fish in; a wear.

Obsolete. It occurs in the Statutes,
25 Edw. III. ch. 4.

appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.

Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninepins. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.
Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham holds. Shakespeare.

GO'RDIAN.* adj. [from Gordius, a Phrygian husbandman, made king by the oracle of Apollo; who is said to have then tied up his utensils of husbandry in the temple, and in a knot so intricate that no one could find out where it began or ended.
It was pretended, that whoever should loose this knot, should be king of all Asia. Alexander the Great, without staying to untie it, cut it with his sword.
The Latin nodus gordianus, or gordian knot, was hence adopted to express any difficult matter; and has passed into our language.] Intricate; difficult.

Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.
As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
The binding knot of the late Gordian conspiracy. Proc. against Garnet, &c. sign. S. s. 3.
Strange power of home, with how strong-twisted arms,

And Gordian-twined knot, dost thou enchain me!
P. Fletcher, Poesies.

What power, what force, what mighty spell, if not

Your learned hands can loose this Gordian knot?
Milton, Vac. Ec.

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
His braided train. Milton, P. L.

GORE.† n. s. [gor, Saxon, gór, Welsh, sanious matter; gorr, Swed. the same;
gar, Goth. blood.]

1. Blood effused from the body.

A grisly wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore-blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.
Spenser, F. Q.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore.
Dryden, Æn.

Their veins, after forty days' burial, extended with blood, being opened with a lancet, have yielded a gore as plentiful, fresh, and thick, as that which issues from the vessels of young and sanguine persons.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 278.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gore. Milton, P. L.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood
Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood.
Denham.

3. Dirt; mud. The Saxon and Swedish words have also the same meaning. Gar

is used in the north of England for miry or dirty.

As a sow waloweth in the stynkyng gore pytte, or in the puddell. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 18.

TO GORE. v. a. [zebopian, Sax.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Commission takes his brother swine to gore.
Tate, Jun.

For arms his men long pikes and javlins bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

Some toss'd, some gor'd, some trampling down
he kill'd. Dryden.

His rival gor'd in ev'ry knotty trunk.
Thomson, Spring.

GORGE.† n. s. [gorge, Fr.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver.
Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare, Othello.

This mighty sail-winged monster, that menaces to swallow up the land, unless her bottomless gorge may be satisfied with the blood of the king's daughter of the church.
Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.
Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. A meal or gorgeful given unto birds, especially hawks. Cotgrave.

No lure will cause her stoop, she bears full gorge. Watson, Sonnets.
Because the vultures had but small pickings, shall we therefore go and fling them a full gorge?
Milton, Apol. for Smeectymn.

4. In architecture, a kind of concave moulding.

5. In fortification, the entrance of a bastion, a ravelin, or other outwork.

TO GORGE. v. a. [gorger, Fr.]

1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiare.

Being with his presence glutt'd, gorg'd, and full.
Shakespeare.

He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.
Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison, Cato.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den.
Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.

TO GORGE.* v. n. To feed.

The very garbage that draws together all the fowls of prey and ravin in the land, to come and gorge upon the church.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

GORGED.† adj. [from gorge.]

1. Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorge'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare.

2. In heraldry, denoting a crown of a peculiar form about the neck of a lion or other animal.

GORGEFUL.* n. s. [gorge and full.] A meal for birds. See the third sense of GORGE. Not now in use.

GORGEOUS.† adj. [gorgias, old Fr. Skinner.—Our own word at first was gorgieuse.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

What gorgieusness of shewes with the vulgar and simple, what multitude of ceremonies with the superstitious! Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

GORGET.† n. s. [from gorge.]

1. The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a palsy fumbling on his gorget, Shakes in and out the rivet. Shaks. Troil. & Cress.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles.

See how his gorget peers above his gown, To tell the people in what danger he was.

B. Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget, As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras.

2. It is now a small convex ornament, gilt or of silver, worn by the officers of foot upon their breasts when on duty.

3. Formerly it was used for that part of the female dress called a ruff. It is in our old lexicography, and is so used by Cleaveland in his poems; but is now obsolete; though Dr. Johnson explains neckerchief by gorget. See NECKERCHIEF.

GORGON. n. s. [γοργώ, Gr.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire.

Milton, P. L.

Why didst thou not encounter man for man, And try the virtue of that gorgon face To stare me into statue? Dryden.

Dryden, Æn.

GORMAND.† n. s. [gourmand, French. See GOURMAND.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

The gurmond's paunch is fed.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), i. 4.

That great gormond, fat Apicius.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Many are made gormands and gluttons by custom, that were not so by nature. Locke.

GORMANDER.* n. s. [gourmand, French.] A great eater. Huloet.

GORMANDIZE.* n. s. [from gormand.] Voraciousness. See GOURMANDIZE.

TO GORMANDIZE.† v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace; Leave gormandizing. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

He that censures the good fellow, commonly makes no conscience of gluttony, and gormandizing at home.

Hovell, Lett. ii. 3.

No scene of it must pass without an eating and gormandizing parasite.

Hales, Sermon, at the end of his Rem. p. 22.

GORMANDIZER.† n. s. [from the verb.] A voracious eater.

Not fit that you should be the sheriffs' tasters; It were enough, you being such gormandisers,

To make the sheriffs, henceforth, turn arrant misers! Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 113.

GORREL-BELLIED.* See GOREBELLIED.

GORSE.† n. s. [γορσε, Sax.] Furze; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter.

And for fair corn-ground are our fields surcloy'd

With worthless gorse.

Kyd, Trag. of Cornelia, (1594.)

I see thee breathing on the barren moor, That seems to bloom, although so bleak before; There if beneath the gorse the primrose spring,

Or the pied daisy smile below the ling, They shall new charms, at thy command, disclose.

Crabbe, Birth of Flattery.

GORY. adj. [from gore.]

1. Covered with congealed blood. When two boars with rankling malice met, Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret.

Spenser.

Why dost thou shake thy gory locks at me? Thou canst not say I did it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

GO'SHAWK.† n. s. [gō, goose, and hawc, a hawk. It is said to prey on wild geese.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast; So seem poor doves at goshawks sight aghast.

Fairfax.

Here are also aeries of hawks, and sundry other birds; as, goshawks, lannars, hobbies, &c.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

GO'SLING. n. s. [from goose.]

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling.

L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL.† n. s. [gōsper, ppel, Sax. God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον, Greek; soskel, skeal swach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. The glad tidings of the actual coming of the Messiah; and hence the evangelical history of Christ.

What the word εὐαγγέλιον in Greek, which we render gospel, signifies among authors, is ordinarily known, viz. from εὖ and ἀγγέλλω, good news, or good tidings. Thus the angel speaks of the birth of Christ, ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΖΟΜΑΙ ὑμῖν χαρὰν μεγάλην, I bring you good tidings of great joy, i. e. very joyful good tidings. Only in this sacred use of it, there seems to be a metonymy, or figure very ordinary, whereby the word which signifies good news, is set to denote the history of that good news, the birth, and life, and resurrection of Christ, which all put together is that joyful news or good tidings. — And so this word gōsper, or by euphony gospel, in Wicliffe's translation, and ever since, notes these good tidings delivered; as first by an angel; and after that, by the apostles by word of mouth; so here in writing, by way of history also; and in brief signifies that blessed story of the birth, life, actions, precepts, and promises, death, and resurrection of Christ; which, of all other stories in the world, we Christians ought to look on with most joy, as an εὐαγγέλιον or good word, i. e. a gospel.

Hammond on the Gospels, Annot. 1.

2. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun Be spread, and flourish where it first begun.

Waller.

All the decrees whereof Scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation.

Hammond.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel!

Bentley.

3. Divinity; theology.

Help us to save free conscience from the paw Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw.

Milton, Sonnet to Cromwell.

4. Any general doctrine.

The propagators of this political gospel are in hopes their abstract principle would be overlooked.

Burke.

To Go'SPEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakspeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gossellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gosspe'l'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?

Shakspeare.

Go'SPELLARY.* adj. [from gospel.] Theological.

Let any man judge, how well these gossellary principles of our presbyterians agree with the practice and doctrine of the holy apostles.

The Cloak in its Colours, (1679), p. 8.

Go'SPELLER.† n. s. [Sax. gōþpellepe, evangelista. Sax. Chron.]

1. An evangelist. This is the primary sense, of which Dr. Johnson takes no notice, but assigns the use of this word merely to the name of the followers of Wicliffe. Wicliffe himself uses it for an evangelist.

Matheu that was of Judee, as he is sett first in order of gossellers, so he wroot first the gospel in Judee. Wicliffe, N. Test. Prolog. on St. Matt. Men made in the gospel rede

Of saint Mathewe the gossellere.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6887.

2. A name of the followers of Wicliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

Our new gossellers do spurne and kicke against it. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. Q. iii. b. What, is Juvenius become so tame,
To be a new gosseler?

Old Morality of Lusty Juvenius.

The blynde papiste, the weake papiste, and simple gosseller, as you terme them.

Bp. Hooper on the Ministers' Apparel.

That as well the catholicks with the gossellers, as they again with the catholicks, be and remain in true and unfeigned peace.

Accord of Ulm, (1620), Wotton's Rem. p. 533.

How much have we declined from that zeal and love, which our fathers bore to the Reformation! There were two things that were visible in the practice of those who first embraced it among us: the one was the great pleasure they took in reading the Scriptures, from whence they were in derision called gossellers.

Bp. Burnet, Fast Sermon, (1680.)

Have trodden down our holy Roman faith.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

3. He who reads the Gospel at the altar. See EPISTLER.

These be my gossellers,

These be my pistillers,

These be my queristers. Skelton, Poems, p. 113.

The principal minister using a decent cope, and being assisted with the gosseller and epistler.

Const. and Can. Ecc. 24.

To Go'SPELLIZE.* v. a. [from gospel.] To form according to the gospel.

This command, thus gossellized to us, hath the same force with that whereon Ezra grounded the pious necessity of divorcing.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

Goss.* n. s. A kind of low furze or gorse. See GORSE. Gorse is called goss in Kent.

Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Go'SSAMER.† n. s. [gossippium, low

Lat. Dr. Johnson.—Skinner and Mr. Nares offer the French gossampire. "The true etymon of this word is obvious to many illiterate peasants, however, in Craven. This down, or rather exhalation, is well known by the name of summer-goose, or summer-gauze; hence gauze o' th' summer, gauzamer, alias gossamer." Craven Dialect, 1824.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn; or rather vapour arising from boggy or marshy ground, in warm weather. Craven Dial.

A lover may bestride the gossamers
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamere.

Drayton, Nymphidia.

The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore.

Dryden, Virg.

Go'SSAMERY.* adj. [from gossamer.] Light; flimsy; unsubstantial.

Filmy, gawzy, gossamery lines,

With lucid language, and most dark designs.

Pursuits of Lit. P. 1. ver. 85.

Go'SSIP.† n. s. [gōb and jýb, relation, affinity, Saxon; i. e. relation by a religious obligation. Our own word was accordingly at first godsib, as in Chaucer; then godsip, as in Campion's Hist. of Ireland; and lastly, gossip. It is now commonly understood of the god-mother. Chaucer uses it for godfather.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Our christian ancestors, understanding a spiritual affinity to grow between the parents and such as undertook for the child at baptism, called each other by the name of Godsib, which is as much as to say, that they were sib together, that is of kin together through God. And the child, in like manner, called such his God-fathers, or God-mothers. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell.

Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me;
After so long grief, such nativity. Shakspeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tipping companion. From the familiarity of conversation, or merry making, at some christenings, this sense of gossip perhaps arose.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab,

And when she drinks, against her lips I bob.

Shakspeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,

And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,

The common chat of gossips when they meet.

Dryden.

4. In a good sense, as a friend or neighbour.

One mother, whenas her foolhardy child

Did come too neare, and with his talons play,

Half dead through feare, her little babe revild,

And to her gossips gain in counsell say;

How can I tell, &c.

Spenser, F. Q.

A woman said to her neighbour, alas, gossip, what should we now do at church, since all our saints are taken away?

Homil. of Place and Time of Prayer, P. ii.

5. In modern conversation, mere tattle; trifling talk.

To Go'SSIP.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me. —

— With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shaks.

His mother was a votress of my order,

And, in the spiced Indian air by night,

Full often hath she gossip'd by my side. Shaks.

Such swarms of men that had renounced their virility, and led an idle life, &c. went gadding and gossiping up and down, telling odd stories to the people, as old wives and nurses do to children.

More on the Sev. Churches, Pref.

He gives himself up to an idle gossiping conversation. Lavo.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,

Fullwarm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Go'SSSIPING.* n. s. [from gossip.] A going about to collect or report mere tattle; a meeting of gossips.

Let not customary sluggishness make us unwieldy for any thing but gossipings.

Bp. Rainbow, Serm. (1635), p. 40.

'Tis possible to go into a masculine company, where 'twill be as hard to edge in a word as at a female gossiping.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 73.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking, and gossipings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

Go'SSSIPRED. n. s. [gossipry, from gossip.]

Gossipped or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.

Davies on Ireland.

Gosso'ON.* n. s. [Fr. garçon.] A lad, a low attendant formerly in the wealthy families in the Irish. The Scotch use garson as an attendant.

In most Irish families there used to be a barefooted gossoun, who was slave to the cook and the butler, and who in fact, without wages, did all the hard work of the house. Gossouns were always employed as messengers. Castle Rackrent, p. 93.

Go'STING. n. s. [rubia.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

GOT. pret. of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakspeare, Coriol.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Theristes get thee, thou shalt be

Low'd and esteem'd. Dryden, Juv.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot.

Dryden, State of Inn.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

GOT. part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.

Knolles, Hist.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do.

Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world?

Arbutnot, John Bull.

Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born.

Pope.

GOTE.* n. s. A water-passage; a channel for water. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dial. See GUTTER.

GOTH.* n. s. [Lat. Gothus; old French, Goth; Sax. Lota; from Gothia, or Gothland.]

1. One of the people in the northern parts of Europe, first called Getes, afterwards Goths.

There are considerable reasons to persuade us, that the Getes and Goths, who were of Aramaean origin, made their incursions out of the northern parts of Asia, through Sarmatia, into Scandia and other regions of Europe, where they settled themselves.

Bibliott. Bibl. i. 507.

Not very solicitous whether originally a Goth or a Celt. Campbell, Lit. Hist. of Ireland, p. 72.

The Goths [spoken of by Hickes, in his remarks on the Mæso-Gothick language;] were those who inhabited Mæsia, not far from the northern borders of Greece, a vast tract of country now comprehended in Turkey; whose language, with different dialects, probably extended over all the north of Europe, nearly in the same latitude, from the coast of Norway to the Black Sea.

Pegge, Anec. of the Eng. Language.

2. One not civilized; one deficient in general knowledge; a barbarian.

I look upon these writers as Goths in poetry.

Addison, Spect. No. 62.

What do you think of the late extraordinary event in Spain? Could you have ever imagined, that those ignorant Goths would have dared to banish the Jesuits?

Lord Chesterfield.

GO'THAMIST.* n. s. [from the old saying, "As wise as a man of Gotham;" a place in Nottinghamshire formerly, it is feigned, noted for some pleasant blunders; whence a man of Gotham denoted a simple person. See Grose's Local Proverbs.] One who is not wise.

As those scholars in their tales, even so the Romish writers have been so defective in uttering of their meaning concerning the same speech of Christ, that they have merited, like to the former Gothamists, to be dismissed with laughter for speaking so foolishly.

Bp. Morton, Disc. of Impunit. &c. (1633), p. 123.

GO'THICAL.* adj. [old Fr. gothique, from GO'THICK.] Goth.

1. Respecting the country or language of the Goths.

In which box were certain scrolls of parchment written with Gothical characters, but containing Castilian verses, which comprehended many of his acts. Shelton, Don Quix. iv. 24.

Francis Junius published those precious fragments of the ancient Teutonic language, [the fragments of the Mæso-Gothick gospels,] under the name of Uphil, a Gothick bishop in Mæsia.

M. Shelton, Tr. of Wotton's View of Hickes, p. 200. Dr. Hickes points out a very striking feature of resemblance in the similar pronunciation of gg when in contact, by observing that, in this situation, the first g had, in the Mæso-Gothick, the sound of n, as it has in the Greek. This he exemplifies in the Gothick verb gaggan, to go, which, he tells us, from such pronunciation produced the Saxon verb gangan.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

2. Denoting a particular kind of architecture, distinguished by the terms ancient and modern, the heavy or light; the former being that which the Goths brought with them from the north in the fifth century, which is very coarse and massive; the latter being introduced about the tenth century, which runs into the other extreme of delicacy and lightness, and is sometimes called arabesque. See ARABESQUE.

There is nothing in this city [Sienna] so extraordinary as the cathedral, which — can only be looked upon as one of the master-pieces of Gothick architecture. Addison on Italy.

York-minster I look upon to be the criterion, according to which the beauties or defects of every Gothick church are to be estimated.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

3. Rude; uncivilized.

Ah! rustic ruder than Gothic. Congreve.

GO'THICK.* n. s. The Gothick language.

Besides Wormius, Verelius, and Gudmundus Andree, there are very few that have professedly treated the ancient Gothick.

Pref. to Serenius's Swed. and Eng. Dict. 2d ed. 1757.

GO'THICISM.* n. s. [from Gothick.]

1. A Gothick idiom.

This peculiarity Mr. Sibbald, the chronicler of the Scottish poetry, in his zeal for Gothicism, has endeavoured to derive from an unknown character (Θ) in the Gothic Gospels of Uphilas, which were written in the fourth century.

Chalmers on the Language of Sir D. Lyndsay.

2. Conformity to Gothick architecture.

I am glad you enter into the spirit of Strawberry Castle, it has a purity and propriety of Gothicism in it. Gray, Letters.

3. The state of barbarians.

Night, Gothicism, confusion, and absolute Chaos are come again. Shenston.

TO GO'THICIZE.* v. a. [from Gothick.] To bring back to barbarism.

The language and manners of the higher ranks are not gothicized. Strutt, Queen-Hoo Hall.

GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job, xxviii. 15.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

GOUD. n. s. Woad; a plant. Dict.

GOVE. n. s. A mow. Tusser.

TO GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair, Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tusser.

TO GO'VERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; guberno, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then It grows impossible to govern men. Wallers.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are, govern all things in times of peace. Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax; as, am governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me, And let this your lesson be, In our language evermore Words that govern go before. Manger, Fr. Gram.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

TO GO'VERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,

Your wicked atoms may be working now To give bad counsel, that you still may govern. Dryden.

GO'VERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe. Locke.

GO'VERNANCE. n. s. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Mac. ix. 31.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill, Till through wise handling, and fair governance, I him recured to a better will. Spenser, F. Q.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still, Under the surly Gloster's governance? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He liketh is to fall into mischance That is regardless of his governance. Spenser, Muioptomos.

GO'VERNANT.† n. s. [gouvernante, Fr.]

A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

I saw Envy there drest up in a widow's veil, and the very picture of the governante of one of your noblemen's houses.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo's Vis. p. 98.

GO'VERNESS. n. s. [gouverneresse, old Fr., from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods, Pale in her anger, washes all the air, That rheumatic diseases do abound. Shakespeare.

2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Danae is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower. Sidney.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon.

3. A tutress; an instructress; a directress.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. More against Atheism.

GO'VERNMENT. n. s. [gouvernement, Fr.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself: the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute. Lesley.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found Their government, and their great senate choose Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton, P. L.

While he survives, in concord and content The commons live, by no divisions rent; But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

Swift.

5. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause; And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;

Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,

Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine; The want thereof makes thee abominable.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes' windows fall, Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;

Each part depriv'd of supple government,

Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

Shakspeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body.

Obsolete.

Their god

Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;

But I them ward'd all with wary government.

Spenser, F. Q.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GO'VERNOUR. n. s. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers.

Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations.

Ps. xxii. 28.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience; as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain.

Shakspeare, Othello.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltham will I, where the young king is,

Being ordain'd his special governour;

And for his safety there I'll best devise.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.

Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governours and courtiers.

Lesley

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth.

Ja. iii. 4.

GOURD.† n. s. [gouhorde, French.]

1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped.

Miller.

But I will haste, and from each bough and brake, Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice To entertain our angel-guest.

Milton, P. L.

Gourd seeds abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions.

Hill.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French. Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors; from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer.

Hammer.

3. An instrument of gaming. See GORD.

GO'RDINESS. n. s. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey.

Farrier's Dict.

GO'URMAND.* n. s. [French. See GORMAND.] Written also gurmand, as are also the derivatives, gurmandize. A glutton; a greedy eater.

This gurmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

With difficulty I return to what remains of this ignoble task, for the disdain I have to change a period more with the filth and venom of this gurmand, swelled into a confuter. Milton, Colast.

To GO'URMANDIZE.* v. n. [from gourdmand.] To play the glutton. See TO GORMANDIZE.

Cockeyram.

GO'URMANDIZE.* n. s. [from gurmand.] Gluttony; voraciousness.

A tiger forth out of the wood did rise,

That with fell claws, full of fierce gurmandize,

And greedy mouth wide gaping like hell gate,

Did run at Pastorell, her to surprize.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 34.

Lacedemon, whence gurmandize, drunkenness, luxury, dissolution, avarice, envy, and ambition were banished.

Summary of Du Bartas, (1621.) P. ii. p. 54.

GO'URNET. n. s. [cuculus.] A fish.

GOUT. n. s. [goutte, French.]

1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the lowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather

Groan so in perplexity, than be cur'd

By the sure physician death. Shakspeare, Cymb.

This very rev'rend lecher, quite worn out

With rheumatisms, and crippled with his gout,

Forgets what he in youthful times has done,

And swings his own vines in his son.

Dryden, Juu.

2. A drop. [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

I see thee still;

And on thy blade, and dudgeon, goutts of blood,

Which was not so before. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

GOUT. n. s. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word.

Catalogues serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies.

Woodward on Fossils.

GOUT-SWOLLEN.* adj. [gout and swollen.] Inflamed with the gout.

Huloet.

The sickly ladie, and the gowtie peere, Still would I haunt, that love their life so deare.

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 4.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die gowty.

Graunt.

Knots upon his gowty joints appear, And chalk is in his crippled fingers found.

Dryden, Pers.

Most commonly a gowty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and the other extremities, being delicate.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Relating to the gout.

There are likewise other causes of blood-spitting; one is the settlement of a gowty matter in the substance of the lungs.

Blackmore.

3. Boggy; as, gowty land.

4. Swelled.

This humour in historians hath made the body of ancient history in some parts so gowty and monstrous.

Spenser on Prod. p. 105.

GO'UTINESS.* n. s. [from gout.] The pain of the gout.

Sherwood.

GOWD.* n. s. A gaud; a toy; whence gowdies, play-things. Used in the north of England. See GAUD.

Nay, lock how the man stands as he were gok'd!

B. Jonson, Mag. Lady.

To GOWL.* v. n. [Icel. goela.] To howl.
Used by Wicliffe. Obsolete. See: To Howl, and To YELL.

GOWN. n. s. [gonna, Ital; gwn, Welsh and Erse.]

1. A long upper garment.

They make garments either short, as cloaks, or,
as gowns, long to the ground.

Abbot, Description of the World.

If ever I said a loose bodied gown, sew me up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread; I said a gown.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

In length of train descends her sweeping gown,
And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known.

Dryden.

2. A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, till I see you dressed in it.

Pope.

3. The long habit of a man dedicated to acts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish counties, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for any honest minister, scarcely to buy him a gown.

Spenser on Ireland.

Girt in his Gabin gown the hero sat.

Dryden, Æn.

Yet not superior to her sex's cares,
The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and china she's the last appeal;
In these great points she leads the commonwealth.

Young.

4. The dress of peace.

He Mars depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield;
Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field.

Dryden.

Go'WNED.† adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.

A noble crew about them waited round
Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Well might the gown'd Romans fear when Pompey fell. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 215.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around.

Dryden.

Go'WNMAN. n. s. [gown and man.] A man devoted to the acts of peace; one whose proper habit is a gown.

Let him with pedants

Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen.

Rowe.

Thus will that whole bench, in an age or two,
be composed of mean, fawning gownmen, dependants upon the court for a morsel of bread.

Swift.

Go'WNSMAN.* n. s. An academical phrase of modern times for a member of the university, at least of Oxford; formerly gownman.

These were all the gownmen that I knew above
80 years old in Oxford.

Bp. Lloyd to Dr. Charlett, (1710.) Aub. L. i. 208.

If townsmen by our influence are so enlightened,
what must we gownmen be ourselves!

The Student, (1750.) i. 56.

Go'ZZARD.* n. s. [a corruption of goose-herd.] One who tends geese: used in the north of England, and perhaps elsewhere, Mr. Malone says: In Lincolnshire, Mr. Pegge says, but in the meaning of a fool.

GRAB.* n. s. A vessel peculiar to the Malabar coast; having usually two masts, but sometimes three.

To GRA'BLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.]

1. To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.

My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grappleing in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

2. To lie prostrate on the ground.

Ainsworth.

3. To grapple, in the west of England.

Grose.

GRACE.† n. s. [grace, French; gratia,
Latin; grace, Erse.]

1. Favour; kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity.

Sidney.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God.

Shakspeare.

Such as were popular,
And well deserving, were advanced by grace.

Daniel.

Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately passed?

King Charles.

Yet those remov'd,
Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relents, not to blot out mankind.

Milton, P. L.

He received all the graces and degrees, the protectorship and the doctorship could be obtained there.

Clarendon.

Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A princess horn.

Dryden, Fab.

None of us, who now your grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before. Dryd.
Proffer'd service I repaid the fair,
That of her grace she gave her maid to know
The secret meaning of this moral show.

Dryden.

2. Favourable influence of God on the human mind.

In simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world. 2 Cor. i. 12.

The evil of sin is that we are especially to pray against, most earnestly begging of God, that he will, by the power of his grace, preserve us from falling into sin.

Duty of Man.

Prevenient grace descending had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead.

Milton, P. L.

3. Virtue; effect of God's influence.

Within the church, in the publick profession and external communion thereof, are contained persons truly good and sanctified, and hereafter saved; and together with them other persons void of all saving grace, and hereafter to be damned.

Pearson.

How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit.

Pope.

4. Pardon; mercy.

Noble pity held
His hand a while, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace.

Waller.

Bow and sue for grace,
With suppliant knee.

Milton, P. L.

5. Favour conferred.

I should therefore esteem it great favour and grace,

Would you be so kind as to go in my place. Prior.

6. Privilege.

But to return and view the cheerful skies,
To few great Jupiter imparts this grace.

Dryd.

7. A goddess, by the heathens supposed to bestow beauty.

This forehead, where your verse has said
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd. Prior.

8. Behaviour, considered as decent or unbecoming.

The same words in Philoclea's mouth, as from one woman to another, so as there were no other body by, might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt.

Sidney.

Have I reason of good grace in what I do?

Temple.

9. Adventitious or artificial beauty; pleasing appearance.

One lilac only, with a statelier grace,
Presum'd to claim the oak's and cedar's place;
And, looking round him with a monarch's care,
Spread his exalted boughs to wave in air.

Harle.

Her purple habit sits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face.

Dryden, Æn.

To write and speak correctly gives a grace, and gains a favourable attention to what one has to say.

Locke.

10. Natural excellence.

It doth grieve me, that things of principal excellency should be thus bitten at by men whom God hath endued with graces, both of wit and learning, for better purposes.

Hooker.

To some kind of men,
Their graces serve them but as enemies.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

In his own grace he doth exalt himself.
More than in your advancement. Shaks. K. Lear.

The charming Lausus, full of youthful fire,
To Turnus only second in the grace
Of manly mien, and features of the face.

Dryden, Æn.

11. Embellishment; recommendation; beauty.

Where justice grows, there grows the greater
grace,
The which doth quench the brand of hellish smart.

Spenser.

Set all things in their own peculiar place,
And know that order is the greatest grace. Dryd.
The flow'r which lasts for little space,
A short-liv'd good, and an uncertain grace.

Dryden.

12. Single beauty.

I pass their form and every charming grace.

Dryden.

By their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

14. Single or particular virtue.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stablesness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The graces of his religion prepare him for the most useful discharge of every relation of life.

Rogers.

15. Virtue physical.

O, mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.

Shakspeare.

16. The title of a duke or archbishop;
formerly of the king, meaning the same as your goodness, or your clemency.

Here come I from our princely general
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience. Shaks. Hen. IV.
High and mighty king, your grace, and those your nobles here present, may be pleased to bow your ears.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

According to the usual proceedings of your grace, and of the court, with delinquents which are overtaken with error in simplicity, there was yielded unto him a deliberate, patient, and full hearing, together with a satisfactory answer to all his main objections.

White.

17. A short prayer said before and after meat. [from the first word of the Latin prayer, "Gratias Tibi agimus." Wicliffe uses graces for thanks, St. Mark, xiv.]

Your soldiers use him as the grace fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Our excess of modesty makes us shamed in all the exercises of piety and devotion. This humour prevails upon us daily; inasmuch, that at many well-bred tables the master of the house is so very modest a man that he has not the confidence to say grace at his own table; a custom which is not only practised by all the nations about us, but was never omitted by the heathens themselves.

Addison, Spect. No. 458.

While grace is saying after meat, do you and your brethren take the chairs from behind the company.

Swift.

Then cheerful healths, your mistress shall have place;

And what's more rare, a poet shall say grace. Pope.

GRACE-CUP. n. s. [grace and cup.] The cup or health drank after grace.

The grace-cup serv'd, the cloth away,
Jove thought it time to shew his play. Prior.

To GRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adorn; to dignify; to embellish; to recommend; to decorate.

This they study, this they practise, this they grace with a wanton superfluity of wit.

Hooker.

I do not think a braver gentleman,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Little of this great world can I speak,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself. Shakespeare, Othello.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled. Bacon.

Rich crowns were on their royal scutcheons
plac'd,
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd.

Dryden.

By both his parents of descent divine;
Great Jove and Phebus grac'd his noble line.

Pope.

Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too.

Pope.

2. To dignify or raise by an act of favour.

He writes

How happily he lives, how well-belov'd,
And daily graced by the emperor.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

He might at his pleasure grace or disgrace whom he would in court. Knolles.

Dispose all honours to the sword and gun,
Grace with a nod, and ruin with a frown.

Dryden, Juv.

3. To favour.

Please it your highness

To grace us with your royal company.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

When the guests withdrew,
Their courteous host, saluting all the crew,
Regardless pass'd her o'er, nor grac'd with kind adieus. Dryden.

4. To supply with heavenly grace.

Grace the disobedient. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 50.

GRACED. adj. [from grace.]

Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GRACEFUL. † adj. [from grace.]

1. Full of grace and virtue. Not now in use.

You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman, against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Beautiful with dignity.

Amid the troops, and like the leading god,
High o'er the rest in arms, the graceful Turnus rode. Dryden.

Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance;
Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance. Pope.
Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride,
Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide.

Pope.

Graceful to sight, and elegant to thought,
The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught.

Young.

GRACEFULLY. † adv. [from graceful.] Elegantly; with pleasing dignity.

Through nature and through art she rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd. Swift.

breast,

Did next in gracefulness, and beauty, stand
To breathing figures. Dryden, Ovid.

He executed with so much gracefulness and beauty, that he alone got money and reputation.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

There is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryd. Ovid, Pref.

If hearers are amaz'd from whence
Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,
Which, though her modesty would shroud,
Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;
While gracefulness its art conceals,
And yet through ev'ry motion steals. Swift.

GRACELESS. adj. [from grace.] Void of grace; wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.

This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady dear. Spenser.
Whose hap shall be to have her,

Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shaksp.

In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. L'Estrange.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryd.

GRACELESSLY.  adv.* [from graceless.] Without elegance.

The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable, saving two called antepenultima; and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

GRACELESSNESS.  n. s.* [from graceless.] Want of grace; profligacy.

It were loathsome to run over what has been before said of our adversary's insolency and unmannerliness, impudency and gracelessness against the Scriptures.

Dr. Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Nov. (1619), p. 165.

In which I finde receipt so gracious. Chapman.
From now reveal

A gracious beam of light; from now inspire
My tongue to sing, my hand to touch the lyre. Prior.

3. Acceptable; favoured.

Doctrine is much more profitable and gracious
by example than by rule. Spenser.

He made us gracious before the kings of Persia,
so that they gave us food. 1 Esd. viii. 80.

Goring, who was now general of the horse, was no more gracious to prince Rupert than Wilmot had been. Clarendon.

4. Virtuous; good.

Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

5. Excellent. Obsolete.

The grievous abuse which hath been of councils, should rather cause men to study how so gracious
a thing may again be reduced to that first perfection.

Hooker.

6. Graceful; becoming; pleasing. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Camden. There is no usage of this word more ancient than in the present sense; and it has been employed, in our own time, by one of our ablest writers.

A knave childe she bare by this Waltere
Ful gracious, and fair for to behold.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale.

There was not such a gracious creature born.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Being season'd with a gracious voice.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Rutilia, that is, red head. Camden.
Sallust's expression would be shorter and more compact: Cicero's more gracious and flowing.

Bp. Hurd.

GRACIOUSLY. adv. [from gracious.]

1. Kindly; with kind condescension.

His testimony he graciously confirm'd, that it was the best of all my tragedies. Dryden.

He heard my vows, and graciously decreed
My grounds to be restor'd, my former flocks to feed. Dryden.

If her majesty would but graciously be pleased to think a hardship of this nature worthy her royal consideration. Swift.

2. In a pleasing manner.

GRACIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from gracious.]

1. Mercifulness.

Their enemies shall laugh, when themselves shall have cause to weep, unless the graciousness of God stir up some worthy princes of renown, and reputation, with both sides to interpose their wisdom.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. Kind condescension.

The graciousness and temper of this answer made no impression on them. Clarendon.

3. Possession of graces or good qualities.

The acts derive their graciousness from the habits.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 437.

4. Pleasing manner.

He possessed some science of graciousness and attraction which books had not taught.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 147.

GRADUATION. n. s. [graduation, French; gradus, Latin.]

1. Regular progress from one degree to another.

The desire of more and more rises by a natural gradation to most, and after that to all.

L'Estrange.

2. Regular advance step by step.

From thence,
By cold gradation, and well balance'd form,
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

The psalmist very elegantly expresseth to us the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety.

Tillotson.

3. Order; sequence; series.

'Tis the curse of service;

Preferment goes by letter and affection,
Not, as of old, gradation, where each second Stood heir to th' first. Shakespeare, Othello.

4. Regular process of argument.

Certain it is, by a direct gradation of consequences from this principle of merit, that the obligation to gratitude flows from, and is enjoined by, the first dictates of nature.

South.

GRADATORY. n. s. [gradus, Latin.] Steps from the cloisters into the church.

Ainsworth.

GRADATORY.* adj. [from gradation.] Proceeding step by step.

Could we have seen his [Macbeth's] crimes darkening on their progress, till they attain the direct excess of human depravity; could this gradatory apostasy have been shewn us; could the noble and useful moral, which results, have been thus forcibly impressed upon our minds, without a violation of those senseless unities [of time and place?]

Seward, Lett. iii. 243.

GRADE.* n. s. [French.] Rank; degree. This word is of modern introduction into our language. And yet the Sax. grabe, grab, ordo, was in use. See GRADELY.

GRADELY.* adv. Well; handsomely. Lancashire Dialect. Decently; orderly. Craven Dial. In Cheshire, the word is an adjective, denoting a decent, orderly, good sort of man; perhaps, Mr. Wilbraham says, from gradus, Latin. Others cite the Saxon grabe, grab, ordo. See Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words.

GRADIENT. adj. [gradiens, Lat.] Walking; moving by steps.

Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary being, did creep up and down as if it had been alive.

Wilkins.

GRADUAL. adj. [graduel, Fr.] Proceeding by degrees; advancing step by step; from one stage to another.

Nobler birth

Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man.

Milton, P. L.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, till at length, by many steps and ascents, they come to be at greatest.

South.

GRADUAL† n. s. [gradus, Latin.]

1. An order of steps.

Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,
The pavement kiss'd, and thus the saint implor'd.

Dryden.

2. A rail; an ancient book of hymns or prayers.

[Fr. graduel.] See GRAIL.

GRADUALITY. n. s. [from gradual.] Regular progression.

This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light.

Brown.

GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.]

1. By degrees; in regular progression.

When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once.

Newton, Opticks.

The Author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it.

Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually.

Arbuthnot.

2. In degree.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastick reason of brutes.

Grew.

TO GRADUATE. v. a. [graduier, Fr.; gradus, Latin.]

1. To dignify with a degree in the university.

John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did good service.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a noise as if the terms of architraves, frizes, and cornices were enough to graduate a master of this art.

Wotton.

2. To mark with degrees.

The places were marked where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers.

Derham.

3. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals: a chemical term.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO GRADUATE.* v. n.

1. To take an academical degree; to become a graduate: as, he graduated at Oxford.

2. To proceed regularly, or by degrees.

A grand light falls beautifully on the principal figure, but it does not graduate sufficiently into distant parts of the cave.

Gilpin.

GRADUATE† n. s. [gradué, Fr. graduatus, low Latin, from gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academical degree.

I know the arts

And sciences do not directlier make

A graduate in our universities,

Than an habitual gravity prefers

A man in court.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

An oath taken by Oxford graduates [was] that they should not profess at Stamford.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 8.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,
And choose a female doctor for the gout.

Branstor.

GRADUATESHIP.* n. s. [from graduate.] The state of a graduate.

An English concordance, and a topick folio, the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship.

Milton, Areopagitica.

GRADUATION† n. s. [graduation, French; from graduate.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.

The gradation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole.

Grew.

2. Improvement; exaltation of qualities.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its gradation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oyl of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall.

Brown.

3. The act of conferring academical degrees.

The ministers are now reconciled to distinction; and as it must always happen, that some will excel others, have thought gradation a proper testimony of uncommon abilities or acquisitions.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

GRAFF. n. s. A ditch; a moat. See GRAVE.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep.

Clarendon.

GRAFF† n. s. [greffe, Fr. Dr. John-
GRAFT. } son. — Rather from the Sax.

graban, as Lye long since observed, which signifies to dig, to excavate. So also Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 376. And see TO GRAFF.] A small branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels.

Raleigh.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see
With insolence invade a foreign tree.

Dryden, Virg.

If you cover the top with clay and horse dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heal the sooner.

Mortimer.

Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives.

Pope.

TO GRAFF† v. a. [greffer, Fr. Dr. John-
TO GRAFT. } son. — It is the Saxon verb graban, to dig; Goth. graban, the same; and Iceland. grafa.]

1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graft you on to bear.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

With his pruning hook disjoint
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graft more happy in their stead.

Dryden.

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.

Now let me graff my pears, and prune the vine.

Dryden.

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in; for God is able to graff them in again.

Romans, xi. 23.

These are th' Italian names which fate will join
With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To impregnate with an adscititious branch.

We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not

Be grafted to your relish. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;

Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident grafted upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

- TO GRAFF. v. n. To practise incision.

In March is good grafting the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow:
From moon being changed, till past be the prime,
For grafting and cropping is very good time.

Tusser.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

- GRAFFER.† n. s. [from graft or graft.]
GRAFTER. } One who propagates fruit
by grafting. Hulot.

Or that the grafter and waterer be nothing — without whose work there should be no increase.

Abp. Cranmer, Ansv. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 378.

I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful grafters of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the incision is made. Evelyn.

- GRAIL.† n. s. [grêle, Fr. from gracilis, Lat. Menage.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was;

And, lying down upon the sandy grail,

Dronk of the stream as clear as crystal glass.

Spenser, F. Q.

The bottom yellow, like the golden grayle,

That bright Pætolus washeth with his streams.

Spenser, Vis. of Bellay.

- GRAIL.* n. s. [low Latin, graduale, gradale; old French, greel.] A book containing some of the offices of the Roman church.

The greyle is not sayd. Lib. Fest. fol. 33.

Among the books they found there, were one hundred psalters, as many grayles, and forty missals, which undoubtedly belonged to the choir of the church. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. vol. 1. Diss. 2.

- GRAIN.† n. s. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian; have all the following significations. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. and Norv. grion, corn, fruits of the earth; from the Su. Goth. gro, to germinate, to grow.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,

And say which grain will grow, and which will not.

Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty.

Mortimer.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,

And shortly comes to harvest.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,

Nor Phoebus fed his oxen on the plain.

Dryden, Pastorals.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame.

As to the other grains, it is to be observed, as the wheat ripened very late, the barley got the start of it, and was ripe first. Burke on the Scarcity.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains

That issue out of dust. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

By intelligence

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physsick twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a pennyweight;
and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value.

Holyday.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn;
the weight whereof is therefore called a grain;
which ariseth, being multiplied to scruples,
drachms, ounces, and pounds. Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air;
the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateh of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon.

His brain

Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace.

Hammond.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving. Addison.

I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology. Watts on the Mind.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter. [from the Teut.
grænen.]

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Shakespeare.

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solider parts, contains a curdled grain not to be found in ivory. Brown.

Stones of a constitution so compact, and a grain
so fine, that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.

11. Died or stained substance.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,

And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,

Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser, Epithalam.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd,

Livelier than Melibean, or the grain

Of sarra, worn by kings and heroes old.

Milton, P. L.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,

All in a robe of darkest grain,

Flowing with majestic train. Milton, II Pens.

The third, his feet

Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,

Sky-tinctur'd grain!

Milton, P. L.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres. This and the next sense are adopted from the eighth.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what

You rather must do than with what you should do,

Made you against the grain to voice him consul.

Shakespeare.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,

I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,

Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;

Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,

Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire.

Dryden, Juv.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton, Opticks.

15. A tine; a spike.

A grain-staff is a quarter-staff with a pair of short tines at the end, which they call grains.

Ray, E. and South Country Words.

The boatswain struck with a pair of grains out of the cabin window a most beautiful fish, about ten pounds' weight. White's Journal, p. 36.

- TO GRAIN.* v. n. [from the noun. Fr.
grainer.] To yield fruit.

The londe began to greyn,

Which whilom had ben bayreyn.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

- TO GRAIN, or GRANE.* v. n. [Sax. grān- nan.] To groan. Yorkshire dialect, and more conformable to the original word than groan.

- GRAIN'ED.† adj. [from grain.]

1. Rough; made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid

In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,

Yet bath my night of life some memory. Shaks.

2. Dyed in grain.

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;

And there I see such black and grained spots,

As will not leave their tinct. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Persons lightly dipt, not grained in generous honesty, are but pale in goodness.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 9.

- GRAIN'ING.* n. s. [from grain.] Indentation.

It is called by some the unmilled guinea, as having no graining upon the rim. Leake.

- GRAINS. n. s. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.

Give them grains their fill,

Husks, draff, to drink and swallow.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

To GRAITH.* v. a. [Sax. geþæbian.] To prepare; to make ready; to furnish with things suitable in the north of England.

These clerkes bete him well, and let him lie,
And græthen hem, and take hir horse anon,
And eke hir mele, and on hir way they gon.
Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

GRAITH.* n. s. [Sax. geþæbe; Germ. gerath.] Furniture; equipage; goods; riches. North.

GRAM.* adj. [Sax. gram; old Fr. grams, "fâché, en colère." Lacombe.] Angry. In our old lexicography, grame. See GRIM and GRUM.

GRAME'RCY.† interj. [contracted from grant me mercy. Dr. Johnson.—This is a mistake: It is the French grand merci, great thanks. Our old lexicography thus explains it: "Gramericy to thee; which is a manner of thankes geving among the vulgares." Huloet. Chaucer writes it after the original, "Grand mercy, lord, God thank it you, quoth she." Clerk's Tale.] An obsolete expression of obligation.

Gramercy, Mammon, said the gentle knight,
For so great grace. Spenser, F. Q.

Gramercy, sir, said he; but mote I weet
What strange adventure do ye now pursue?

Spenser.
Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what's the news?
Shakespeare.

We have our several psalms for several occasions, without gramericy to your liturgy.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Defence.
Madam, quoth he, gramericy for your care,
Dryden, Cuck and the Fox.

GRAMINEOUS. adj. [gramineus, Latin.] Grassy. Gramineous plants are such as have a long leaf without a footstalk.

GRAMINIVOROUS. adj. [gramen and voro, Latin.] Grass-eating; living upon grass. The ancients were versed chiefly in the dissection of brutes, among which the graminivorous kind have a party-coloured choroides. Sharpe, Surgery.

GRAMMAR.† n. s. [grammaire, Fr. grammatica, Latin; γραμματική.]

1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.

To be accurate in the grammar and idioms of the tongues, and then as a rhetorician to make all their graces serve his eloquence.

Fell, Life of Hammond.
We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.
Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.

2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.

Varium et mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

To speak and write without absurdity the language of one's country, is commendable in persons of all stations, and to some indispensably necessary; and to this purpose, I would recommend above all things the having a grammar of our mother tongue first taught in our schools, which would facilitate our youths learning their Latin and Greek grammars. Tatler, No. 234.

GRAMMAR School. n. s. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.

Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.

To GRAMMAR.* v. n. To discourse according to the rules of grammar.

I'll grammar with you,
And make a trial how I can decline you.

Beaumont and Fl. Laws of Candy.
GRAMMARIAN. n. s. [grammarien, Fr. from grammar.] One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators. Dryden.

GRAMMATICAL. adj. [grammatical, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Sidney.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Holder.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction unless born with a poetical genius.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.
GRAMMATICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Watts.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true.

Baker on Learning.
GRAMMATICASTER.† n. s. [Latin.]

A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

He tells thee true, my noble neophyte; my little grammaticaster, he does! B. Jonson, Foetaster.

There would not then be so many poetian and unworthy preachers in divinity, so many pytiffogers in law, so many quack-salvers in physics, so many grammaticasters in country schools.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Harlib, (1648), p. 23.
I have not vexed language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French grammaticasters. Rymer.

To GRAMMATICISE.* v. n. [from the Lat. grammaticus.] To act the grammarian.

Grammaticising pedantically, and criticising spuriously upon a few Greek particles.

Ep. Ward on the Myst. of the Gospel, (1673), p. 44.
To GRAMMATICISE.* v. a. [from the Lat. grammaticus.] To render grammatical.

I always said, Shakespeare had Latin enough to grammaticise his English.

Johnson, Boswell's Life of Johnson.

GRAMMATICATION.* n. s. [from the Lat. grammaticus.] Rule of grammar.

A language of a philosophical institution, or a real character, would be by much the most easy; as being free from all anomaly, equivocality, redundancy, and unnecessary grammatications.

Dalgarno, Didascaloph. (Ox. 1680), p. 52.
GRAMMATICK.* adj. [Lat. grammaticus.]

Pertaining to grammar.

They having but newly left those grammaticick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably to learn a few words with lamentable construction.

Milton on Education.

We conclude, therefore, that what was thus inspired was the terms, and that grammaticick congruity in the use of them, which is dependent thereon. Warburton, Doctrine of Grace.

GRAMMATIST.* n. s. [Lat. grammatista.]

"Græci grammaticum à grammatista distinguunt; et illum quidem absolutè, hunc mediocriter doctum existimant." V. Sueton. de Gram. Illustr. cap. 4.] A grammaticaster.

The grammatist has misled the grammarian, and both of them the philosopher.

H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, i. 328.

GRAMPLE.† n. s. [Fr. grampelle.] A crab-fish. Cotgrave.

GRAMPUS.† n. s. [perhaps from the Fr. grand and poisson, a large fish.] A large fish of the cetaceous kind.

'Give me leave to name what fish we took; dolphins, porpice, grampasse, which Mr. Sands thinks is the right dolphin, none else being of that opinion. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 384.

GRANA'DO.* n. s. [Span. granada de fuego.] A grenade. See GRENADE.

GRANADI'ER.* See GRENADEIER.

GRANAM.* See GRANNAM.

GRANARY. n. s. [granarium, Lat.] A storehouse for threshed corn.

Ants, by their labour and industry, contrive that corn will keep as dry in their nests as in our granaries. Addison.

The naked nations clothe,
And be the exhaustless granary of a world.
Thomson, Spring.

GRANATE.† n. s. [from granum, Latin.]

1. A kind of marble so called, because it is marked with small variegations like grains. Otherwise GRANITE.

2. The gem called a garnet. See GARNET.

GRAND.† adj. [grand, Fr. grandis, Lat.]

1. Great; illustrious; high in power or dignity.

God had planted, that is, made to grow the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so grand a Lord. Raleigh, Hist.

2. Great; splendid; magnificent.

A voice has flown
To re-enlave a grand design. Young.

There is generally in nature something more grand, and august, than what we meet with in the curiosities of art. Addison, Spect. No. 414.

3. Principal; chief. Hence, in composition, grand-juror, grand-master, grand-signior, and the like.

What cause
Mould our grand parents, in that happy state,
Favour'd of heav'n so highly, to fall off
From their Creator. Milton, P. L.

4. Eminent; superiour; very frequently in an ill sense.

Our grand foe Satan. Milton, P. L.

So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold. §
Milton, P. L.

5. Noble; sublime; lofty; conceived or expressed with great dignity.

Among colours, such as are soft or cheerful (except perhaps a strong red which is cheerful) are unfit to produce grand images.

Burke on the Sublime and Beautiful, § 16.

6. It is used to signify ascent or descent of consanguinity.

GRANDAM. n. s. [grand and dam or dame.]

1. Grandmother; my father's or mother's mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

We have our forefathers and great grandames
All before us, as they were in Chaucer's days.

Dryden.

The tygress heart belies thy angel face:

Too well thou shew'st thy pedigree from stone;
Thy grandame's was the first by Pyrrha thrown.

Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women

Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have right,

And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight.

Dryden.

GRANDCHILD. † n. s. [grand and child.]

There is something very absurd in this.
Grandfather is properly the great or greater father; but the case seems to be just the contrary with grand-child, who is the little or less child. The French therefore express it much more sensibly than we do, by petit fils. Pegge.]
The son or daughter of my son or daughter; one in the second degree of descent.

Augustus Cæsar, out of indignation against his daughters and Agrippa his grandchild, would say that they were not his seed, but imposthumes broken from him.

Bacon.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so

May great grandchildren of thy praises grow.

Donne.

He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grand- child of king James.

Clarendon.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild
both!

Milton, P. L.

He 'scaping with his gods and reliques fled,

And tow'rd's the shore his little grandchild led.

Denham.

GRANDDAUGHTER. † n. s. [grand and daugh- ter.]

This grandaughter of a man, who will be an everlasting glory to the nation, has now for some years with her husband kept a little chandler's or grocer's shop for their subsistence.

Bp. Newton, Life of Milton.

GRANDE. † n. s. [grand, French; grandis, Latin. At first our word was grandy.] A man of great rank, power, or dignity.

In a great person, right worshipful sir, a right honourable grandy, 'tis not a venial sin; no, not a peccadillo! Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.
In this merry-seat, it is observable, three gran- dies are met together; blessing, joy, and hope;
and yet there is no strife for precedence.

Ahp. Laud, Serm. p. 83.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they swayed.

Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. South.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceroys for the grandees, and posts of honour for the noble families.

Addison.

GRANDESHIP.  n. s.* [from grandee.] The rank, or estate, of a grandee; a lordship.

I think the conde de Altamira has no less than nineteen grandeships centered in his person.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, p. 142.

GRANDEVITY. † n. s. [from grandævus,
Latin.] Great age; length of life.

Dict.

Dr. More for his function and grandevity sake handles Mr. Baxter so respectfully, and forbears all such juvenilities as he had used towards Eu-genius. Annot. on the Disc. of Truth, (1683,) p. 185.

GRANDEVIOUS. adj. [grandævus, Latin.]
Long lived; of great age.

Dict.

GRANDEUR. † n. s. [French.]
1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur.

South.

2. Greatness, as opposed to minuteness.

Let a man try to conceive the different bulk of an animal, which is twenty, from another, which is a hundred times less than a mite; or to compare, in his thoughts, a length of a thousand diameters of the earth with that of a million; and he will quickly find that he has no different measures in his mind adjusted to such extraordinary degrees of grandeur or minuteness.

Addison, Spect. No. 420.

3. Elevation of sentiment, language, or mien.

To want little is true grandeur; and very few things are great to a great mind. Tatler, No. 170.

GRANDFATHER. n. s. [grand and father.]

The father of my father or mother; the next above my father or mother in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, saith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds?
He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed.

Bacon.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great.

Swift.

GRANDFICK. adj. [grandis and facio,
Latin.] Making great.

Dict.

GRANDILOQUENCE.  n. s.* [Lat. gran- dis, great, and loquor, to speak. In our old lexicography, the word is grandi- loquy.] High, lofty, big speaking.

The prophet has promised them with such magnificent words, and enthusiastic grandiloquence.

More, Myst. of Godl. p. 271.

GRANDILOQUOUS.  adj.* [Lat. grandilo- quus.] Using lofty words. Cockeram.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grando, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail.

Dict.

GRANDITY. n. s. [from grandis, Latin.]
Greatness; grandeur; magnificence.

An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and brieffness.

Camden, Rem.

GRANDLY.  adv.* [from grand.] Sublimely; loftily.

I now saw what I never saw before, a prodigious sea, with immense billows, coming upon a vessel, so as that it seemed hardly possible to escape. There was something grandly horrible in the sight. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 348.

GRANDMOTHER. n. s. [grand and mother.]

The mother of my father or mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice.

1 Tim. i. 5.

GRANDNESS.  n. s.* [from grand.] Greatness.

In order to prove to any one the grandness of this fabric of the world, one needs only to bid him consider the sun. Wollaston, Rel. of Nat. § v. 14.

GRANDSIRE. n. s. [grand and sire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame
Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name.

Denham.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat.

Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

Plac'd in their ranks, their godlike grandsires stood.

Dryden.

So mimic ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest.

Pope.

GRANDSON. n. s. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store,

Give much to you, and to his grandsons more.

Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes.

Swift.

To GRANE.  To groan.* See To GRAIN.

GRANGE. † n. s. [grange, French; low Lat.

grangia; probably from grana gerendo, the grange being in former times the place where the rents of monasteries were paid in grain, which was there stored up; the custody of which was assigned to one of the monks, who was called grangiarus; and hence grange means simply a granary also, though
Dr. Johnson takes no notice of the distinction. The grange, in Lincolnshire, and other northern counties, signifies any lone house; and, in some places, bears with it the name of the village or town to which it is near.]

1. A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, saith he;—the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot;
nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

It is only the poor grange,
The patrimony which my father left me,
I would be tenant to.

Beaumont and Fl. The Prothetess.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories.

Ayliffe.

2. A granary. [Fr. grange, a barn. Cotgrave.]

Methought it was the sound
Of riot and ill-mang'd merriment,
Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe,
Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds;
When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,
In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan.

Milton, Comus.

GRANITE. n. s. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison on Italy.

GRANITICAL* adj. [from granite.] Consisting of granite.

Viewed at a distance, this enormous mass of stone has the appearance of a human figure; and its gigantic form has given rise to a variety of fables. On approaching it, we find that it consists of several ledges of granite, piled one upon another in the rudest manner. If, however, we bow down to this granitical god, we shall meet deities at every step.

Polwhele, Hist. of Devonsh. vol. I. p. i.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain. Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GRANNAM.† n. s. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in ludicrous or low language. Granny is still the northern word.

Her mother goodwy' Polish has confess'd it
To grannum Keep, the nurse, how they did change
The children in their cradles.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Ghosts never walk till after midnight, if I may believe my grannam.

Beaumont and Fl. Lover's Address.

I stripped again, as well to find what's progressed,
As to satisfy my grannam's farther curiosity.

Tatler, No. 15.

Of my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Gay.

GRANNY.* See GRANNAM.

To GRANT.† v. a. [from garantir, Fr. Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minshew thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor. Dr. Johnson. — It is directly from the old French verb, graaunter, or graaunter, to promise, to satisfy. V. Roquefort, Gloss. in V. GRAANTER. Probably from the Latin gratum, what is agreeable. Our word at first, like the French, was grant, and so continued to be late in the seventeenth century.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word which we translate saints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones. Pearson.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by thy decree,
The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden, Æn.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire
A moment elder than my rival fire,
Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Sam. xvii.
Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted
repentance unto life. Acts, xiii. 18.

Didst thou not kill this king?

— I grant ye.

— Dost grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;
The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant,
And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dryden.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowell.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants. Davenant.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE.† adj. [from grant.] That may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe, Poregeron.

I will inquire therefore in what cases dispensations are grantable, and by whom.

Bp. of London's (Sherlock) Charge, 1759, p. 6.

GRANTE'E. n. s. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abby-lands. Swift.

GRANTOR. n. s. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granular bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, Fr. from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Sprat.

To GRANULATE.† v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

Most of the Schemnitz silver ore holds some gold, which they separate by melting the silver, then granulating it. Brown's Travels, p. 59.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Ray.

GRANULATION. n. s. [granulation, Fr. from granulate.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Sharp, Surgery.

GRANULE. n. s. [from granum, Latin.]

A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Colours.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Fall of little grains.

GRAPE. n. s. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Anacreon, for thy sake
I of the grape no mention make;
Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,
Cursed plant, I lov'd thee well.
Here are the vines in early flow'r describ'd,
Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side.

Cowley.

Pope, Ossy.

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. n. s.
A flower.

GRAPE Shot.* n. s. In artillery, a combination of small shot, put into a thick canvass bag, and corded strongly together, so as to form a kind of cylinder, the diameter of which is equal to that of the ball which is adapted to the cannon.

Chambers.

To GRAPE. See To GROPE.

GRAPELESS.* adj. [grape and less.] Wanting the strength and flavour of the grape.

The entertainment consisted of cold fish, lean chickens, rusty hams, raw venison, and grapeless wines.

Jenyns.

GRAPESTONE. n. s. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,
A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill.

Prior.

GRAPHICAL† adj. [γράφω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In this so graphical a description of the Son of God, clothed in all the pomp and majesty of his Father, the attitude is most observable: "His right foot was on the sea, and his left on the earth."

Warburton, Serm. xx.

GRAPHICALLY† adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

After it, succeeded their third dance; than which a more numerous composition could not be seen; graphically disposed into letters, and honouring the name of the most sweet and ingenious prince, Charles duke of York.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Very rhetorical delineations follow their miseries by this invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, graphically as in a map described.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellus.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GRAPHICK.* adj.

1. Graphical.

He can

Find all our atoms from a point t' a span;
Our closest creeks and corners; and can trace
Each line, as it were graphick, in the face.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Relating to engraving.

Availing himself of his poetical talent, and his facility in the graphick art.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. ii. 157.

GRAPHOMETER.* n. s. [Fr. graphomètre, from the Gr. γράφω, to write, and μέτρον, a measure.] A surveying instrument.

As for the bearings and distances, they are very different from those I have given, which answered in every part, almost as exactly as if I had surveyed a field with a graphometer.

Drunmond, Trav. (1749), p. 244.

GRAPNEL† n. s. [grappil and grappin, Fr. the grapple of a ship. Cotgrave.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

With grisly sounne out goeth the grete gunne—
In goth the grapnel so full of crokes.

Chaucer, Leg. of Cleopatra.

To GRA'PPLE† v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappeln, German. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the M. Goth. gripan, to seize, to lay hold of any thing; Su. Goth. gripan; Sax. gripan.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

Your grace and I
Must grapple upon even terms no more.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.
They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close.

Milton on Education.

Living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy, still to grapple with at last.
Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings?

South.

Antæus here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statues seem to live.

Addison.

2. To contest in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,
Two grappling Ætnas on the ocean meet,
And English fires with Belgian flames contend.

Dryden.

To GRA'PPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly.
Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

That business
Grapples you to the heart and love of us.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

For hippagines, vessels for the transporting of horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Anacharsis.

Heylyn.

GRA'PPLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestler's hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus, strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in the air, expir'd and fell.

Milton, P. R.

Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them, on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd.

Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT. n. s. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace. Not in use.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrow, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and griesly graplement.

Spenser, F. Q.

GRA'PY.* adj. [Fr. grappu.]

1. Full of clusters of grapes. Cotgrave.

The grapy clusters spread
On his fair brows, and dangle on his head.

Addison, Ovid.

2. Made of the grape.

And on the marble altar's polish'd frame
Pours forth the grapy stream.

Gay, Ovid.

GRA'SHOPPER† n. s. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners' legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries.

Bacon.

While cicada is rendered a grashopper, we commonly think that which is so called among us to be the true cicada; wherein, as we have elsewhere declared, there is a great mistake; for we have not the cicada in England, and indeed no proper word for that animal, which the French nameth cigale: That which we commonly call a grashopper, and the French sauterelle, being one kind of locust, so rendered in the plague of Egypt, and in old Saxon named gersthop.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 109.

Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows
crown'd,

Disperse a grateful chitiness all around;
The grashopper avoids th' untainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there.

Addison.

The women were of such an enormous stature,
that we appeared as grashoppers before them.

Addison, Spect.

GRA'SIER† n. s. One who feeds cattle. See GRAZIER.

He was by turns a fiddler and a farmer, a grasier and a poet, with equal success.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 299.

To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.

O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind.

Sidney.

Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent
Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues.

Milton, P. L.

Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, bold.

Denham.

Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand.

Dryden, Ind. Emperor.

2. To seize; to catch at.

This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before.

Clarendon.

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time? Young.

To GRASP. v. n.

1. To strive; to endeavour to seize; to try at.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift.

2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.

See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for life.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. To gripe; to encroach.

Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps till he can hold no more.

Dryden.

GRASP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp,
To kill the ravisher. Dryden, Don Sebast.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.

2. Possession; hold.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Power of seizing.

Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton, Comus.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon.

GRA'SPER,† n. s. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at. Sherwood.

GRASS,† n. s. [græp, Sax. gras, Goth. græsa, Icel. from gro, to germinate, to sprout.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.

Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and below as bulls. Jer. l. 11.

The beef being young, and only grass fed, was thin, light, and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt. Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.

GRASS OF PARNASSIA. n. s. [parnassia,
Latin.] A plant.

This plant is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. Miller.

TO GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.

Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it, the sooner for grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tusser.

GRASS-GREEN.* adj. [grass and green.]
Green with grass.

He is dead and gone, lady,
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf,
At his heels a stone. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
He heeled him to the fatal place,
Where Margaret's body lay;
And stretch'd him on the grass-green turf,
That wrapt her breathless clay. Mallet, William and Margaret.

GRASS-GROWN.* adj. [grass and grown.]
Grown over with grass.

Desolating Famine, who delights
In grass-grown cities, and in desert fields,
Desolation o'er the grass-grown street
Expands his raven wings. Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

If a friend my grass-grown threshold find,
O, how my lonely cot resounds with glee!
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

GRASS-PLOT. n. s. [grass and plot.] A small level covered with short grass.

Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakspeare, Tempest.
The part of your garden next your house should be a parterre for flowers, or grass-plots bordered with flowers. Temple.
They are much valued by our modern planters,
to adorn their walks and grass-plots. Mortimer.

GRASS-POLY. n. s. A species of WILLOW-WORT.

GRASSA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. grassatio.] A ranging about to do wrong.

If in vice there be a perpetual grassation, there must be in virtue a perpetual vigilance. Feltham, Res. ii. 8.

GRA'SSLESS.* adj. [grass and less.] Wanting grass.

The wintry snow had covered all their greene,
Nought else upon the grassless ground but winter's waste was scene. Mir. for Mag. p. 556.

GRA'SSINESS. n. s. [from grassy.] The state of abounding in grass.

GRA'SSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.

No did he leave the mountains bare unseem,
Nor the rank grassy fens delisht untry'd. Spenser.
Rais'd of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milton, P. L.

The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,
To dews obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryden.

GRATE. n. s. [crates, Lat.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other:
such as are in cloysters or prisons.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. Shakspeare.

Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bord'ring hills, and open plain. Daniel.
A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vestals, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.

2. The range of bars within which fires are made.

My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator.
TO GRATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up with bars. Sherwood.

TO GRATE. v. a. [grater, Fr.]

1. To rub or wear any thing by the attention of a rough body.

Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate. Spenser.

Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

If the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton, Opticks.

2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexatious.

Thereat enraged, soon he gan upstart,
Grinding his teeth, and grating his great heart. Spenser.

They have been partial in the gospel, cull'd and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them.
Decay of Piety.

Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due. Dryden, Don Sebast.

This habit of writing and discoursing, wherein
I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.

3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.

The grating shock of wrathful iron arms.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shock
Of Erebus. Milton, P. L.

TO GRATE. v. n.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or im-portunity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grate. Shakspeare.

Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Esrange.
This grated harder upon the hearts of men. South.

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent.
Locke.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate.
Hooker.

GRATE.* adj. [Fr. grate, "grateful,"
Cotgrave; Lat. gratus.] Agreeable.

Not now in use; but if ingrate, as Dr.
Johnson asserts, be proper for what is unpleasant to the sense, grate for what is the contrary seems also to be proper.
It becomes grate and delicious enough by custom. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 311.

GRA'TEFUL. adj. [gratus, Lat.]

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton, P. L.
When some degree of health was given, he exerted all his strength in a return of grateful recognition to the author of it. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden, Fab.

2. Pleasing; acceptable; delightful; delicious.

Whatsoever is ingrate at first, is made grateful
by custom; but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to satiate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A man will endure the pain of hunger and thirst, and refuse such meats and drinks as are most grateful to his appetite, if he be persuaded that they will endanger his health. Wilkins.

This place is the more grateful to strangers in respect that it being a frontier town, and bordering upon divers nations, many languages are understood here. Brown, Travels.

Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine. Pope.

GRA'TEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]

1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.

He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully replied.
Milton, P. L.
Enough remains for household charge beside,
His wife and tender children to sustain,
And gratefully to feed his dumb deserving train. Dryden, Virg.

In Cyprus long by men and gods obey'd,
The lover's toil she gratefully repaid. Granville.

2. In a pleasing manner.

Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination. Watts.

GRA'TEFULNESS,† n. s. [from grateful.]

1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing Sidney and Herbert. The authority of others, especially of Pope, might have been added to defend the usage of the world. Nor is it yet, perhaps, disused.

A Laconian knight having sometime served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him. Sidney.

Blessings beforehand, ties of gratefulness, The sound of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.

I am pitch'd so high,
To such a growth of full prosperities,
That, to conceal my fortunes, were an injury
To gratefulness, and those more liberal favours
By whom my glories prosper.

Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.
He [Fenton] died poor, but honest; leaving no debts, or legacies, except of a few pounds to Mr. Trumbull and my lady, in token of respect, gratefulness, and mutual esteem.

Pope, Lett. to Broome.

2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.

GRA'TER. n. s. [gratoir, Fr. from grate.]
A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.

Tender handed touch a nettle,
And it sings you for your pains;
Grasp it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains.

So it is with common nature,
Treat them gently, they rebel;
But be rough as nutmeg-graters,
And the rogues obey you well.

GRATIFICATION.† n. s. [gratification, Fr. gratification, Latin.]

1. The act of pleasing.
They are incapable of any design above the present gratification of their palates. South.

2. Pleasure; delight.
How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long used to place his happiness! Rogers.

3. Reward; recompence. A low word.
Calling drunkenness, good fellowship; pride, comeliness; rage, valour; bribery, gratification.
— Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1635), p. 233.

GRA'TIFIER.* n. s. [from gratify.] One who gratifies, or delights.
Bacchus, Ceres, and other eminent persons amongst the heathens, who were great gratifiers of the natural life of man.

More, Myst. of Godl. p. 169.

To GRA'TIFY.† v. a. [gratifier, old Fr.; gratificor, Latin.]

1. To indulge; to please by compliance.
You steer between the country and the court,
Nor gratify whate'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require.

2. To delight; to please; to humour; to soothe.
But pride stood ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe?

The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride.

A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with sauces rather than food.
At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast.

A thousand little impertinencies are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding.
3. To requite with a recompence; as,
I'll gratify you for this trouble.

GRA'TING.* n. s. [from grate.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other; as, the iron gratings of a prison.

2. In a ship, gratings are small ledges of sawed plank on the upper deck.

GRA'TINGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly, offensively.

GRA'TIS. adv. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.

The people cry you mock't them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

They sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee.
The taking of use, though he judged lawful, yet never approved by practice, but lent still gratis both to friends and strangers.

Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis.

I scorned to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offered it gratis by those universities.

GRATITUDE. n. s. [gratitudo, low Latin.]

1. Duty to benefactors.

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Tow'rds her deserving children is enroll'd,
Should now eat up her own!
Suspicious thoughts his pensive mind employ,
A sullen gratitude, and clouded joy.

2. Desire to return benefits.

The debt immense of endless gratitude.
Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like.

GRATUITOUS. adj. [gratuitus, Latin; gratuit, Fr.]

1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.

We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry.

2. Asserted without proof.

The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous declination of atoms, the same poet gives us.

GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]

1. Without claim or merit.

2. Without proof.
I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter; this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles.

GRATUITY. n. s. [gratuité, Fr. from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.

They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity.

He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him.

To GRA'TULATE.† v. a. [gratulator, Latin.]

1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.

To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratefully his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admires.

Whither away so fast?

— No farther than the Tower,
To gratefully the gentle princes there.

Envy itself cannot but gratefully the church of England that is so furnished with learned bishops.
Sir J. Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 10.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratefully at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratefully,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state.

3. To reward. Not now in use.
A thanks to every one; and to gratefully
So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods fuller and higher
Than you have wish'd for.

I could not chuse but gratefully your honest endeavours with this remembrance.

GRATULATION. n. s. [from gratulatio, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance.

GRATULATORY.† adj. [from gratulate.]

1. Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

After a short preamble gratulatory, and signifying his majesty's summons.

There is a gratulatory gift, when one sendeth to another to testify their love and joy.

2. Expressing thanks.

They make a gratulatory oration unto God, for that he has been pleased to assist and accept their services.

Formerly he had disowned any propitiatory sacrifice, content with gratulatory, after the Protestant way.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 54.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave.

GRAVE.† n. s.

1. The place in the ground in which the dead are reposit. [græf, græf, Sax. from græpan, to dig; græf, græf, Icel. graban, Goth. and thus the Germ. grab, a grave; and perhaps all may be referred to the Heb. kaber, a grave. Graves were formerly called by the English pits.]

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spirit,
In the church-way paths to glide.

Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security.
A flood of waters would overwhelm all these fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs: there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths. Nelson.

2. In the plural only, graves is a word used to signify the sediment of tallow melted for the making of candles. It means also this refuse made into cakes as food for dogs.

3. [graf; Germ. A count; low Lat. gravio, and graphio.] A ruler; usually in composition, as landgrave, margrave.

GRAVE-CLOTHES. n. s. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unsound, That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-clothes were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes. St. John, xi. 44.

GRAVE-DIGGER.  n. s.* [grave and digger.] One who digs graves.

Shakspeare, who was a great copier of nature, whenever he introduces any artisans, or low characters, into his plays, never fails to dash them strongly with some distinguishing stain of humour; as may be seen more remarkably in the scene of the grave-diggers in Hamlet.

Guardian, No. 144.

GRAVE-MAKER.  n. s.* [grave and maker.]

A grave-digger.

When you are asked this question next, say a grave-maker; the houses that he makes last till doomsday. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

If you would hear more of this rare physician, and his feats, (for I am sick of him), enquire of sad families, and merry grave-makers.

Whitlock, Memo. of the Eng. p. 100.

GRAVE-STONE. † n. s. [grave and stone.]

The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.

Timon, presently prepare thy grave; Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily. Shakspeare, Timon.

The grave-stone of Christ's tomb was sealed. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 132.

To GRAVE. † v. a. preter. graved; part. pass. graven.

1. To dig. [Sax. ȝrafan. See GRAVE. This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed.] To grave is our northern expression for to break up ground with a spade.

He hath graven and digged up a pit. Ps. vii. 16. Comm. Prayer.

2. To insculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance. [ȝrafan, Sax.; graven, Dutch; graver, Fr.; ꝛꝑꝑꝛ, Gr.]

That grave awfulness, as in your best bred of mastives, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty.

More against Atheism.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Youth on silent wings is flown; Prior.

Graver years come rolling on.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,

Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among Christian philosophers. Law.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness. Greiv, Cosmol.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of cloaths.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

GRAVEL. n. s. [gravier, French; gravel, Dutch; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in base gravel and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones. More.

Thou stand'st

Gravelly in doubt whether to hold them wise. Milton, P. L.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravelly what she would have her to do. Spect.

Wisdom's above suspecting smiles;

The queen of learning gravelly smiles; Swift.

A formal story was very gravelly carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.

Is't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,

But must he wisely look, and gravelly plead? Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESS. n. s. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears, Than settled age his sables, and his weeds

Importing health and graveness. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;

Number makes long disputes and graveness dull. Denham.

GRA'VEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Latin.] Strong scented. Dict.

GRA'VEUR. n. s. [graveur, French; from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryden, Dufres.

2. The stile or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

The toilsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide.

GRA'VID.* adj. [Lat. gravidus.] Pregnant. The word is old in our language.

A careful husband over his gravid associate.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 25.

GRA'VIDATED.* part. adj. [gravidatus, Lat.] Great with young.

Her womb is said to bear him, to have been gravidated, or great with child.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 24.

GRAVIDA'TION.* n. s. [Latin, gravidatio.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

As ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχειν expresseth a proper conception, so doth ἐν γαστρὶ συλλαβεῖν a proper conception. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 3.

GRAVI'DITY. n. s. [gravidus, Lat.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

Women obstructed, have not always the forementioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRA'VING.† n. s. [from grave.]

1. Carved work.

Skillful to work in gold;—also to grave any manner of gravings, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

2. Impression.

Later vows, oaths, or leagues can never blot out those former gravings, or characters, which by just and lawful oaths were made upon their souls. King Charles.

To GRA'VITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursu'd,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITA'TION. n. s. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRA'VITY. n. s. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity, is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton, Opticks.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

Dryden, Æn.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Law.

GRA'VY.† n. s. [kraw, Cambro-Brit. grav, Germ. crnor, blood, Serenius.] The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumption.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRAY.† adj. [græx, Saxon; grau, Danish; gray, Germ. and Dutch. Mr. H. Tooke thinks that it is from the Sax. gepegnan, to dye, to colour.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray hooded even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phæbus' main. Milton, Comus.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton, Opticks.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grisley, and many others. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation.

Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors

mix'd,
Assemble. Milton, P. L.

The restoration of gray heirs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanville, Scepis.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold

Lie charms resistless? Dryden, Jur.
We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison, Spect.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark, like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Casilia, that is, gray eyed. Camden, Rem.
The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shakspere.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay, Trivia.

GRAY.† n. s. A gray colour. The gray of the morning is common in many places for the break of day.

I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakspere, Rom. and Jul.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray. Parnell.

GRAY.† n. s. [from its colour.] A badger. Ainsworth.

This fine

Smooth bawson's cub, the young grice of a gray.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

GRAY.* n. s. A kind of salmon, having a gray back and sides: probably the same as the gulse.

GRAY'BEARD.† n. s. [gray and beard.] An old man; in contempt.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I,
— Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspere.
Have I in conquest stretcht mine ear so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakspere, Jul. Cæs.

A dull relation of the acts of grave graybeards to a young prince might grow fastidious.
Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 35.

GRAY'FLY.* n. s. [gray and fly.] The trumpet-fly.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn. Milton, Lycidas.

GRAY'ISH.* adj. [from gray.] Approaching to a gray colour. Sherwood.

On either side did shine a grayish eye.
Warner, Albion's England.

GRAYLE.* See GRAIL.

GRAY'LING. n. s. [thymallus.] The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton, Angler.

GRA'YNESS.† n. s. [from gray.] The quality of being gray. Sherwood.

To GRAZE.† v. n. [Sax. grazian.]

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.
The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck.

Shakspeare, As you like it.
Grazed where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakspeare.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house.

Dryden, Fob.

The more ignoble throng
Attend their stately steps, and slowly graze along.

Dryden.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain champagnis, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath. Bacon.

The sewers must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed.

Bacon on the War with Spain.

4. [From raser, French.] To touch lightly.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A bullet grazes on any place, when it gently turns up the surface of what it strikes upon.

Cowley, in V. Grass-Hearth.

The shot—

Pierc'd Talgol's gaberdine, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Maguano's brass habergeon,
Who straight A surgeon cried, a surgeon!

Hudibras, i. iii.

To GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grass.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakspeare.
O happy man, saith he, that lo! I see
Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,
If he but know his good. Daniel, Civil Wars.

2. To feed upon.

I was at first as other beasts, that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low.

Milton, P. L.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

Dryden.

Some graze their land till Christmas, and some longer. Mortimer.

This Neptune gave him, when he gave to keep
His scaly flocks that graze the wat'ry deep.

Dryden, Virg.

The lambs with wolves shall graze the verdant mead. Pope.

3. To supply with grass.

He hath a house and barn in repair, and a field or two to graze his cows, with a garden and orchard. Swift.

4. To strike lightly. [Fr. raser.]

Whose solid virtue

The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze, nor pierce. Shakspeare, Othello.
We still say, the skin is grazed, or slightly hurt.

Cowley, in V. Grass-Hearth.

GRA'ZER. n. s. [from graze.] One that grazes or feeds on grass.

His flock daily crops

Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf
Sufficient: after them the cackling goose,
Close grazer, finds wherewith to ease her want.

Philips.

GRA'ZIER. n. s. [from graze.] One who feeds cattle.

All graziers prefer their cattle from meaner pastures to better. Bacon.

Gentle peace, which filleth the husbandman's barns, the grazier's folds, and the tradesman's shop. Howell.

His confusion increased when he found the alderman's father to be a grazier. Spectator.

Of agriculture, the desolation made in the country by engrossing graziers, and the yearly importation of corn from England, are lamentable instances under what discouragement it lies. Swift.

GREASE. n. s. [graisse, French.]

1. The soft part of the fat; the oily or unctuous part of animals.

Grease, that's sweaten

From the murth'rer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To take out a spot of grease they use a coal upon brown paper. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thou hop'st, with sacrifice of oxen slain,
To compass wealth, and bribe the god of gain
To give thee flocks and herds, with large increase;
Fool! to expect them from a bullock's grease.

Dryden, Juv.

A girdle, foul with grease, binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

2. [In horsemanship.] A swelling and gourdiness of the legs, which happens to a horse after a journey, or by standing long in the stable.

To GREASE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bribe or anoint with grease.

A treatise—never to be thumbed or greased by students, nor bound to everlasting chains of darkness in a library. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7.

2. To bribe; to corrupt with presents.

Envy not the store

Of the greas'd advocate that grinds the poor.

Dryden, Pers.

GRE'ASILY.* adv. [from greasy.]

1. With an appearance, as if smeared with grease.

His sweaty neck did shine right greasily.

Mortimer, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 77.

2. Grossly; indelicately.

You talk greasily, your lips grow foul.

Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

GRE'ASINESS. n. s. [from grease.] Oiliness; fatness.

Upon the most of these stones, after they are cut, there appears always, as it were, a kind of greasiness or unctuousity. Boyle.

GRE'ASY.† adj. [from grease.]

1. Oily; fat; unctuous.

The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'ereaten faith. Shakspeare.

2. Smeared with grease.

Even the lewd rabble

Govern'd their roaring throats, and grumbled pity;

I could have hugg'd the gray rogues; they pleas'd me.

Otway.

Buy sheep, and see that they be big-boned, and have a soft, greasy, well curled close wool.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Fat of body; bulky; in reproach.

Let's consult together against this greasy knight.

Shakspeare.

4. Gross; indelicate; indecent.

Chaste cells, when greasy Aretine,
For his rank fics, is surnam'd divine.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. S.

GREAT.† adj. [great, Saxon; groot, Dutch; from the Su. Goth. gro, to encrease.]

1. Large in bulk or number.

Judas, one of the twelve came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves.

St. Matt. xxvi. 47.

All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates and bars, besides unwalled towns a great many.

Deut. iii. 5.

Elemental air diffus'd

In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round. Milton, P. L.

And God created the great whales.

Milton, P. L.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,
As one great furnace flam'd.

Milton, P. L.

The tallest pine
Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great admiral.

Milton, P. L.

2. Having any quality in a higher degree.

There were they in great fear. Palm xiv. 5.

Their power was great. Milton, P. L.

Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Charms such as thine, inimitably great,
He only could express. Broome.

3. Having number or bulk, relative or comparative.

The idea of so much is positive and clear: the idea of greater is also clear, but it is but a comparative idea. Locke.

4. Considerable in extent or duration.

Thou hast spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come. 2 Sam. vii. 19.

5. Important; weighty.

Make sure

Her favours to thee, and the great oath take
With which the blessed gods assurance make.

Chapman.

Many

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them,

For this great journey. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

What is low raise and support,
That to the height of this great argument

I may assert eternal Providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to men.

Milton, P. L.

On some great charge employ'd
He seem'd, or fix'd in cogitation deep.

Milton, P. L.

By experience of this great event,
In arms not worse. Milton, S. A.

After silence then,

And summons read, the great consult began.

Milton, P. L.

And though this be a great truth, if it be impartially considered, yet it is also a great paradox to men of corrupt minds and vicious practices.

Tillotson.

6. Chief; principal.

Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal, who commands you

To render up the great seal presently.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

7. Venerable; adorable; awful.

Thou first art wont God's great authentick will,
Interpreter, through highest heaven to bring.

Milton, P. L.

8. Wonderful; marvellous.

Great things, and full of wonder. Milton, P. L.

9. Of high rank; of large power.

Then the king made Daniel a great man.

Dan. ii. 48.

Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whilst they behold a greater than themselves.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Worthiest by being good,
Far more than great or high. Milton, P. L.

The fantastick complaisance, which is paid to them, may blind the great from seeing themselves in a just light. Tatler, No. 196.

Of all the great, how few
Are just to heav'n, and to their promise true!

Pope, Odys.

Misfortune made the throne her seat,
And none could be unhappy but the great. Rowe.

Despise the farce of state,

The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

The marble tombs that rise on high,

Whose dead in vaulted arches lie;

These, all the poor remains of state,

Adorn the rich, or praise the great. Parrel.

10. General; abundant in consequence or influence.

Prolifick humour, softening all her globe,

Fermented the great mother to conceive.

Milton, P. L.

11. Illustrious; eminent; noble; excellent.

O Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in might. Jer. x. 6.

The great Creator thus replied. Milton, P. L.

The great Son return'd

Victorious with his saints. Milton, P. L.

Fair angel, thy desire which tends to know

The works of God, thereby to glorify

The great Work-master, leads to no excess

That reaches blame. Milton, P. L.

Great are thy works, Jehovah, infinite

Thy power! what thought can measure thee, or tongue!

Relate thee! greater now in thy return,

Than from the giant angels: Thee that day

Thy thunders magnified, but to create

Is greater than created to destroy. Milton, P. L.

The great luminary

Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,

That from his lordly eye keep distance due,

Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L.

Here Cæsar grac'd with both Minerva shone,

Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own. Pope.

Scipio,

Great in his triumphs, in retirement great. Pope.

12. Grand of aspect; of elevated mien.

Such Dido was; with such becoming state,

Amidst the crowd, she walks serenely great.

Dryden, Virg.

13. Magnanimous; generous; high minded.

In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient-bearer to the humbleness. Sidney.

14. Opulent; sumptuous; magnificent.

Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence

He disdain'd not to appear at great tables and festival entertainments. Atterbury.

15. Intellectually great; sublime.

This new created world, how good, how fair,

16. Swelling; proud.

Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discouraged with great looks; wherefore he began to batter the walls. Knolles.

17. Familiar; much acquainted. A low word, Dr. Johnson says. It is used in this sense in Scotland, and Dr. Jamieson thinks it not the adjective great improperly used, but as immediately formed from the Saxon grōd, peace, grōdian, to agree, to be in a state of agreement.

Those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are with them, and thereby wound their honour. Bacon.

18. Pregnant; teeming.

His eyes sometimes even great with tears.

Sidney.

Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb always great with me. Jerem. xx. 17.

Their bellies great

With swelling vanity, bring forth deceit. Sandys.

This fly, for most he stings in heat of day,

From cattle great with young keep thou away.

May, Virgil.

19. It is added in every step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as, great grandson is the son of my grandson.

I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-great grandsires tongue came out of Persia. Camden, Rem.

What we call great-great grandfather they called forthfader. Camden, Rem.

Your great uncle, Edward the black prince of Wales, Shakespeare, Hen. V.

He has crack'd the league

Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Their holiday-clothes go from father to son, and are seldom worn out till the second or third generation; so that 'tis common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather. Addison.

20. Hard; difficult; grievous. A proverbial expression.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons. Bp. Taylor, Devotions.

GREAT. n. s. [from the adjective.] The whole; the gross; the whole in a lump.

To let out thy harvest by great or by day,

Let this by experience lead thee the way:

By great will deceive thee with ling'ring it out,

By day with dispatch. Tusser, Husbandry.

It were behoveful, for the strength of the navy, that no ships should be builded by the great; for by daily experience they are found to be weak and imperfect. Raleigh, Essays.

He did at length so many slain forget,

And lost the tale, and took them by the great.

Dryden.

Carpenters build a house by the great, and are agreed for the sum of money. Moxon, Mech. Exerc.

I set aside one day in a week for lovers, and interpret by the great for any gentleman who is turned of sixty. Addison.

GRE'ATBELLED. adj. [great and belly.] Pregnant; teeming.

Greatbellied women,

That had not half a week to go, like rams

In the old time of war, would shake the press.

Shakespeare.

A greatbellied woman, walking through the city in the daytime, had her child struck out of her womb, and carried half a furlong from her.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

To GRE'ATEN.† v. a. [from great.] To aggrandize; to enlarge; to magnify. A word little used, Dr. Johnson says; yet it is found in the writings of some of our best authors.

After they sought to greaten themselves in Italy itself, using strangers for the commanders of their armies, the Turks by degrees beat them out of all their goodly countries. Raleigh.

Whither doth he bend all his powers but to attain his own ends, to cross another's, to greaten himself, to supplant a rival?

Bp. Hall, Sermon on Man.

The popes are accustomed to do the like, in consideration of their nephews whom they would greaten. Dryden, Def. of the Duchess of York.

A favourite's business is to please his king, a minister's to greaten and exalt him. Bp. Ken.

To GRE'ATEN* v. n. To increase; to become large.

Being committed against an infinite majesty, it [sin] greatens, and rises to the height of an infinite dement. South, Sermon. x. 336.

GREATHE'ARTED. adj. [great and heart.] High spirited; unjected.

The earl, as greathearted as he, declared that he neither cared for his friendship, nor feared his bated. Clarendon.

GRE'ATLY. adv. [from great.]

1. In a great degree.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply.

Milton, P. L.

2. Nobly; illustriously.

Yet London, empress of the northern clime,

By an high fate thou greatly didst expire.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

3. Magnanimously; generously; bravely.

Where are these bold intrepid sons of war,

That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,

And to their general send a brave defiance?

Addison, Cato.

GRE'ATNESS.† n. s. [Sax. græatneffe.]

1. Largeness of quantity or number.

By greatness I do not only mean the bulk of any single object, but the largeness of a whole view, considered as one entire piece.

Addison, Spect. No. 412.

2. Comparative quantity.

We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commen-surate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities. Locke.

All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pain equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself; because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is. Locke.

3. High degree of any quality.

Zeal, in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward, and the certainty. Rogers.

4. High place; dignity; power; influence; empire.

The most servile flattery is lodged most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to greatness, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty.

Sidney.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness.

Shakespeare.

So many

As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I beg your greatness not to give the law

In other realms; but beaten, to withdraw.

Dryden, Æn.

Approaching greatness met him with her charms

Of pow'r and future state;

He shook her from his arms. Dryden.

Themistocles raised the Athenians to their great- ness at sea, which he thought to be the true and constant interest of that commonwealth. Swift.

5. Swelling pride; affected state.

My lord would have you know that it is not of pride or greatness that he cometh not aboard your ships. Bacon.

6. Merit; magnanimity; nobleness of mind.

Greatness of mind and nobleness their seat

Build in her loveliest. Milton, P. L.

7. Grandeur; state; magnificence.

Greatness with Timon dwells in such a draught,

As brings all Brobdingnag before your thought.

Pope.

GREAVE.† n. s.

1. A grove. [Sax. græf.] This is a very ancient form of our word grove.]

Phœbus — with his stremes drieth in the groves

The silver drops, hanging on the leaves.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

She fled into that covert greave.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 49.

Some hid among the leaves,
Some in the taller trees, some in the lower greaves.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

Yet when there haps a honey-fall,
We'll lick the shirup leaves,
And tell the bees that theirs is gall
To that upon the greaves.

Drayton.

2. A groove. [Icel. groof, from grafu, to dig.]

- Either fast closed in some hollow greave,
Or buried in the ground from jeopardy.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 42.

GREAVES. n. s. [from greves, French.]
Armour for the legs; a sort of boots.
It wants the singular number.

He had greaves of brass upon his legs.

1 Son. xvii. 6.

A shield make for him, and a helm, fair greaves,
And cures such

As may renown thy workmanship, and honour him as much. Chapman, Iliads.

GRE'CIAN.* n. s. [Latin, Græcus, from Græcia.]

1. A native or inhabitant of Greece.

The children also of Judah, and the children of Jerusalem, have ye sold unto the Grecians.

Joel, iii. 6.

For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

2. A Jew who understood or spoke Greek.
There arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews. Acts, vi. 1.

He—disputed against the Grecians. Acts, ix. 29.

3. One skilled in the Greek language; as, he is a good Grecian. A colloquial expression.

GRE'CIAN.* adj. Relating to the country of Greece.

The royal towers

Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings.

Milton, P. L.

Look upon Greece under its free states, and you would think its inhabitants lived in different climates, and under different heavens from those at present; so different are the geniuses which are formed under Turkish slavery and Grecian liberty.

Addison, Spect. No. 287.

GRECIAN Fire.* [Fr. feu Gregeois.] Wildfire; such as will burn within water.

To GRE'CIANIZE.* v. n. [from Grecian;
Fr. grecanizer.] To play the Grecian;

translate into Greek.

The name—is grecised, with many other
German words. Walton, Hist. E. P.

GRE'CISM.* n. s. [græcismus, Latin.] An ilium of the Greek language. This word was in use early in the seventeenth century. It is in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor, 1656.

Milton has infused a great many latinisms, as well as grecisms, and sometimes hebraisms, into his poem. Addison, Spect.

That the present Latin Dictys has a Greek original, now lost, appears from the numerous grecisms with which it abounds. Walton, Hist. E. P.
Literal renderings of hebraisms and grecisms should be given in the margin.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Tr. of the Bible, p. 378.

GRE'DALIN.* See GRIDELIN.

GREE.* n. s.

1. Good will; favour; good graces. [gré,
French; probably from the Lat. gratia, or gratus. Ital. "Prendi in grado;" and so our old phrase, "to take in gree," i. e.
in good part, favourably; frequent in
Spenser.]

And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service seen,
Which she accepts with thanks and goodly gree.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Rank; degree. [Lat. gradus.]

He is a shepherd great in gree.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

3. A step. [Lat. gradus; Fr. grez. Dr.
Johnson gives greece, which he says is also written greeze or grice, and is corrupted from degrees; and he defines it
"a flight of steps." But the word, thus varied, seems to be nothing more than the plural of gree, a step; whence, in the north of England, grees are stairs, steps. Grees has been also used in the singular number, and greeses in the plural. See GREES.]

And when he suffride, Paul stood in the grees, [on the stairs, present translation.]

Wicliffe, Acts, xxi. 40.

By many a gree ymade of marbyll graye.

Lydgate, cited by Warton, H. E. P. ii. 89.

To GREE.* v. n. [old Fr. greer.] To agree. It is common in our old poetry, but in modern editions is printed with an elision 'gree, as if it were merely an abbreviation of agree.

Ludgate— for free-men debtors, free

From hurt, till with their creditors they gree.

Mir. for Mag. p. 116.

We have 'greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding day.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The meane that grees with country musick be.

Greene, Forewell to Folly, (1617.)

GREECE.* n. s. [a corruption of grees.
See GREE.] A flight of steps.

After the procession, the king himself remaining seated in the quire, the lord archbishop, upon the greece of the quire, made a long oration.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

GREED.* n. s. [Sax. græbiȝ; Goth. gredags, from gredon, to hunger; Icel.
græd, voracity; probably from the Gr.
grázō, to devour.] Greediness. I find it so used by Scottish writers; and Chaucer once mentions a "rich grede," meaning a greedy person, Rom. R. 6002.

Whose avarice and greed of gaire is such, that they care not whom with they join.

Graham, Anat. of Humours, (Edinb. 1609.)
His insatiable greed of money and power.

Bruce, Trav. iv. iii.

GRE'EDILY.* adv. [Sax. græbelice.]

keen appetite or desire.

He coveteth greedily all the day long.

Prov. xxi. 26.

Greedily she ingorg'd without restraint.

Milton, P. L.

He swallow'd it as greedily
As parched earth drinks rain. Denham.

Ev'n deadly plants, and herbs of pois'now juice,
Wild hunger seeks; and to prolong our breath,
We greedily devour our certain death. Dryden.

2. With vehemence; with desire.

In the primitive church was the gospel greedily re-ceiv'd of the universall world.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) fol. 96. b.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward.

St. Jude, ver. 11.

GRE'EDINESS.* n. s. [Sax. græbiȝneffe.]
Ravenousness; voracity; hunger; eagerness of appetite or desire.

Let not the greediness of the belly, nor lust of the flesh, take hold of me. Eccles. xxiii. 6.
Fox in stealth, wolf in greediness.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Thither with all greediness of affection are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

If thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee. Shakespeare, Timon.

I with the same greediness did seek,
As water when I thirst, to swallow Greek.

Denham.

GRE'EDY.* adj. [græbiȝ, Sax. græddig,
Dan. gretig, Dutch. See also GREED.]

1. Ravenous; voracious; hungry.

As a lion that is greedy of his prey.

Psalms xvii. 12.

Be not unsatiable in any dainty thing, nor too greedy upon meats. Eccles. xxxvii. 29.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

2. Eager; vehemently desirous. It is now commonly taken in an ill sense.

Greedily to know, as is the mind of man,
Their cause of death, swift to the fire she ran.

Fairfax.

The ways of every one that is greedy of gain.

Prov.

Stern look'd the fiend, as prostrate at his will,
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

While the reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands.

Dryden, Virg.

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune! Law.

GRE'EDY-GUT.* n. s. A glutton; a devourer; a belly-god. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word; and it is yet retained in low conversation.

GREEK.* n. s. [Lat. Græcus.]

1. A native of Greece. [Sax. Lpeca; Fr.
Grec.]

Titus, who was with me, being a Greek.

Gal. ii. 3.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek, and Cytherea's son.

Milton, P. L.

He [Homer] makes his countrymen and favourites, the Greeks, move forward in a regular determined march, and in the depth of silence.

Addison, Spect. No. 13.

2. The Greek language.

Paul said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

Acts, xxi. 37.

When thou taught'st Cambridge, and king
Edward Greek.

Milton, Sonnet.

3. A term applied to a merry person.
[supposed to be from the Lat. græcor,
to play the Greek, to use their exercises;
or, as some take it, to drink and revel as they used to do. Sherwood has the phrase, "a merry Greek," which he renders into the French gale-bon-temps;
and Cotgrave renders that by "a merrie grig." However, see CRICK and GRIG.]
She's a merry Greek indeed.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

GREEK.* adj. Belonging to Greece; relating to that country.

He forthwith brought his own native to the Greekish fashion. 2 Macc. iv. 10.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

They allege their numbers, and the promise'd help of Assaracus, a noble Greekish youth.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 1.

GRE'EKING.* n. s. [from Greek.] An inferior Greek writer. A contemptuous word.

Which of the Greeklings durst ever give precepts to Demosthenes? B. Jonson, Discoveries.

GREEKRO'SE.* n. s. [lychnis.] The flower campion.

Thy beauty, Campion, very much may claim; But of Greek-rose how didst thou gain thy name?

Tate, Tr. of Cowley.

GREEN.† adj. [grun, German; groen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the Saxon adjective græne. Junius derives green from the verb græpan, frondere, vivere; Mr. H. Tooke represents it as the past participle of grænian, virescere.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale, and scarce a green.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There are writers of great distinction, who have made it an argument for Providence, that the whole earth is covered with green, rather than with any other colour, as being such a mixture of light and shade, that it comforts and strengthens the eye, instead of weakening or grieving it. For this reason several painters have a green cloth hanging near them, to ease the eye upon, after too great an application to their colouring.

Addison, Spect. No. 387.

Groves for ever green. Pope.

2. Pale; sickly: from whence we call the maid's disease the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's χλωροτή μοιᾶς.

Was the hope drunk,

Wherein you drest yourself? Hath it slept since? And wakes it now to look so green and pale

At what it did so freely? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green sickness.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To tell the green sickness and love's force betray'd To death's remorseless arms the unhappy maid.

Garth.

3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed: from trees in spring.

If I have any where said a green old age, I have Virgil's authority; Sed cruda deo viridisque senectus.

Dryden.

4. New; fresh: as, a green wound.

The door is open, sir; there lies your way: You may be jogging while your boots are green.

Shakspeare.

Griefs are green; And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

In a vault, Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth, Lies festering in his blood. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

VOL. II.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well.

Bacon, Essays.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party; but those are invidious topics, too green in our remembrance.

Dryden.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker, Dedication.

Being an olive tree

Which late he fell'd; and being greene, must be Made lighter for his manage. Chapman.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragile than metal, and so dry wood is more fragile than green.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer, Husb.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unacceptable far fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts, Logic.

7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My salad days,

When I was green in judgement, cold in blood!

Shakspeare.

O charming youth, in the first op'ning page; So many graces, in so green an age.

Dryden.

You'll find a difference Between the promise of his greener days, And these he masters now. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mortimer, Husb.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are seen Upon the spit, next May produces green.

King, Cookery.

GREEN.† n. s.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,

That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd.

Shakspeare.

But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn;

And walks wear fresher green at your return.

Dryden.

Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in daylight; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively.

Newton, Opticks.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue: if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green.

Watts, Logic.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread In warlike march these greens before your town.

Shakspeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green, Where no print of step hath been,

Follow me as I sing. Milton, Arcades.

The young Æmilia, fairer to be seen Than the fair lily on the flow'ry green.

Dryden, Fab.

3. Leaves; branches; wreaths; herbs; plants.

With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives, And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives.

Dryden, Virg.

The fragrant greens I seek my brows to bind.

Dryden.

The vineyard seems to have been a plantation distinct from the garden; as also the beds of greens mentioned afterwards at the extremity of the inclosure, in the nature and usual place of our kitchen garden. Addison, Guard. No. 173.

To GREEN.† v. a. [Sax. grænian.] To make green. A low word.

Great spring before

Green'd all the year; and fruits and blossoms blush'd

In social sweetness on the self-same bough.

Thomson, Spring.

GRE'ENHOUSE. n. s. [green and house.] A house in which tender plants are sheltered from the weather.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, which you may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your greenhouse, kindle some charcoal.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure.

Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Spect.

GRE'ENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, unt'y'd, As each had been a bride. Spenser.

K K

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow.

Newton, Opticks.

GRE'ENLY.* adj. [from green.] Of a green colour.

And make the greenly ground a drinking cup

Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

TO GREITH.* To prepare. See TO GRAITH.

GRE'MIAL. adj. [gremium, Latin.] Pertaining to the lap. Dict.

GRENAD'E. n. s. [Fr. from pomum granatum, Lat.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusee fastened to the touch-hole; as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. Harris.

GRENADI'ER. n. s. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment:

such men being [formerly] employed to throw grenades.

Peace allays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay, Pastorals.

GRENADO. n. s. See GRENADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenadoes can suffice.

Cleveland.
You may as well try to quench a flaming grenado with a shell of fair water as hope to succeed.

GREUT. n. s. A kind of fossile body.

A sort of tin ore, with its greut; that is, a con-geries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of baysalt, and of a brown shining colour, immersed therein. Grew, Museum.

GREW. The preterite of grow.

The pleasing task he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew.

Dryden, Fab.
GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray.] See GRAY.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I spar'd at suit of his grey beard. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Our green youth copies what grey sinners act,
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryd.

GREYHOUND.† n. s. [gruhund, Saxon.

Serenius calls the animal gruhund, from gruhun, to seize. Caius de Canibus derives the name from the Lat. gradus, implying a dog of the first order, or degree. Minsheu from Græcus, as if the word were Greek-hound; the Greeks being the first, he says, who used such dogs for hunting. Blount calls them gyre-hounds. Mr. Pegge follows Blount's opinion; and observes, that "gyre-falcon, according to Phillips, is the largest sort of falcon, next in size to the eagle. So, I conceive, the greyhound was originally gyrehound, as being the largest, tallest, and swiftest species of hound. The letter r, being transposed into the place of the y, will produce gyre-hound." Anecd.
of the Engl. Lang. 2d edit. p. 350.] A tall fleet dog that chases in sight.

First, may a trusty greyhound transform himself into a tiger? Sidney.

So on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hast'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go.

Sidney.
Th' impatient greyhound, slipt from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare.
Dryden.

GRICE.† n. s.

1. A little pig. [Su. Goth. grif, the same.
Formerly it meant a young wild boar.
Grise in the north of England is used for swine.]

2. A step or grées.

No, not a grice;
This a step to love. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
One shewed how fruitfully they had watered his head, as he stood under the grices.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
TO GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Ital.] To cut;
to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not now in use.

His poynant spear he thrust with puissant sway,
That through his thigh the mortal steel did gride.
Spenser, F. Q.

So sore

The griding sword, with discontinuous wound,
Pass'd through him! Milton, P. L.

GRI'DELIN.† adj. [Fr. gris de lin, gray of flax, q. d. gray with a purple hue. Our word is also written gredaline. It was probably a fashionable colour among the ladies.] Of a purplish colour.

The ladies dress'd in rich symars were seen,
Of Florence satten, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin.

Dryden, Fab.
His love fades, like my gredaline petticoat.

Kilgrew, Pars. Wedding.
GRI'DIRON.† n. s. [grind, Islandick, a grate, and iron. Dr. Johnson. — Rather, perhaps, from the Su. Goth. grædda, to bake; as Dr. Jamieson also observes.]

A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.
He had added two bars to the gridiron.

Spectator.
GRIEF.† n. s. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English. Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the Fr. grief, which may be from the Lat. gravo, to weigh down. Grief had formerly, for the plural, grieves or greeves.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.

Shakespeare.
Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief
of it. Addison.

2. Grievance; harm. Not in use.

Be factious for redress of all these grieves,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your grieves, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete.

He being at that time griped, sore, and having grief in his lower bellie.

Treatise of Sundry Diseases, (1591.)
Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm?
No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No.
Honour has no skill in surgery then? No.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.
GRIEFFUL* adj. [grief and full.] Full of sorrow or grief. Obsolete.

The day renews my griefful plaint.

Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc, (1561.)
Which when she sees with ghastly griefful eyes,
Her heart does quake. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 40.

GRIEFLESS* adj. [grief and less.] Sorrowless; without grief. Huloet.

GRIEFSHOT* adj. [grief and shot.] Pierced with grief.

A discontented friend, griefshot
With his unkindness. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

GRIEVABLE* adj. [from grieve.] Lamentable.

There is a vice full grievable.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
GRIEVANCE.† n. s. [greivance, old Fr.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

Madam, I pity much your grievances.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

GRIEVANCE.† v. a. [grever, Fr.; griever,
Flemish; gravis, Lat.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke, iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalm.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.

Gen. vi. 6.
Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembereth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

3. To lament.

The beholders believed his [lord Stafford's] words, and grieved his destiny.

Reresby, Mem. p. 112.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold
The end of all thy offspring end so sad.

Milton, P. L.
With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden, Fab.

GRIE'VE.* n. s. [from grieve.] The person or circumstance which causes grief.

A griever and quencher of the Spirit, a more perfect piece of atheism. Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

GRIE'VINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

GRIE'VOUS.† adj. [grevous, old Fr. gravis, Lat.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be borne.

To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally greivous. Hooker.

Correction is greivous unto him that forsaketh
the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die.

Prov. xv. 10.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but greivous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disobey, but sent greivous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a greivous fault,
And greivously hath Caesar answer'd it.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
Crying sins I call those, which are so heinous,
and in their kind so greivous, that they hasten God's judgements, and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinner. Perkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's greivous sick.

Shakespeare.
GRIE'VOUSLY. adv. [from greivous.]

1. Painfully; with pain.

К К 2

Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. With discontent; with ill will.

Gritus, perceiving how grievously the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt.
Knolles.

3. Calamitously; miserably.

I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information, oftentimes grievously vexed.
Hooker.

4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.

Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt.
Ray on the Creation.

GRIVOUSNESS.† n. s. [from grievous.]

1. Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.
Is. xxi. 15.

That the grievousness of the penalty in many statutes be mitigated.
Bacon, Prop. on the Laws of England.

2. Atrociousness.

Deferring of time, or grievousness of sinners, do not prejudice his grace.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 709.

GRIFFIN.† n. s. [It should rather be

GRIFFON.† written griffon, or gryphon; Lat. griffus and gryps; Gr. γρύψ; Icel. griffon or griffun; Goth. greip, from gripan, to seize; and so, in our old language, this fabled animal is termed the gripe. See GRIPE.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient.

Peacoch on Blazoning.
Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold.
Brown.

GRIFFONLIKE.* adj. [griffon and like.]

Resembling the rapacity of a griffon.

Citations and processes to be served by a corporality of griffonlike promoters and apparitors.
Milton, Of Reformat. B. 1.

GRIG.† n. s. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel. [Some derive this appellation from the Sax. cpecca, the bank of a river, because these animals are fond of harbouring under it. But, from the contortions of this fish, the name may be a corruption of crook, Su. Goth. krok, kroka, to bend. And thus Serenius gives the Iceland. "krokæll, anguilla contorta, à krokwa, Su. kroekas, corrugari, item contorqueri."]

There be several sorts or kind of eels; as the silver eel; and green or greenish eel, with which the river of Thames abounds; and those are called grigs.
Walton, Angler, ch. 13.

3. A merry creature. [supposed from Greek; the Lat. græculus denoting festive, Dr. Johnson says; rather perhaps, trifling, silly. But see the third sense of GREEK. Grig may be thus adopted from the old Fr. Grigois, which means Greek. Yet the French have not this proverbial expression. "A merry grig or Greek" is, in that language, rendered gale-bon-temps. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood. Some pretend, that the origin of this expression is from the nimble and lively motion of the small eel. I find a "merry cricke," however, to be an expression of at least two centuries' date in our language, and of that word grig may be a corruption. See the third sense of CRICK.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as bottle-ale.

4. Health. Shrophshire.

To GRILL.† v. a. [Fr. griller, from gril, a gridiron; grille, an iron grate.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILL.* adj. [gril, horridus. Pr. Parv. The Lat. horridus is used in a similar sense, "cold through fear;" and the Teut. growel is horroure.] Causing to shake through cold. Obsolete.

They han suifrid cold full stronge
In wethers grille, and darke to sight.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 73.

GRILLADE. n. s. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grilied all at Temple-bar.

GRIM.† adj. [Sax. gim, sour, savage, furious; gimman, to rage; Germ. grimm, furious; grimmen, to rage; Su. Goth. gram, enraged, angry; all which, perhaps, may be referred to the Celt. grim, war, battle. "Nothing is so common through the whole compass of language, as to find a word, which was originally applied in an appropriate sense, afterwards converted into some other term with a different meaning, though with a kindred idea.—Grim, which originally meant war in the dialects of the Celtic, still continued among our ancient poets to be attached to the same subject, though from its accidental similarity to grim, in the sense of fierce-looking, it was used as an epithet of war, and oftentimes with a metaphorical application derived from the idea of a furious countenance or menacing form.—In a celebrated passage of Shakspeare we have the addition of the countenance, to which grim was imagined to belong, and the metaphorical imagery arising from this notion: Grim-visag'd War hath smooth'd his wrinkled brow." Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 368. See also GRIM-VISAGED.]

1. Having a countenance of terroure; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim.

Spenser, F. Q.
Grim Saturn yet remains,
Bound in those gloomy caves with adamantine chains.
Drayton.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?
Milton, P. L.

Expert to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war.
Milton, P. L.

Here we have him in the grimmer dress of a revenging judge.
South, Serm. viii. 204.

Whether it would not be the grimmest dispensation that ever befel him, to be thrust out of the world with his sins about his ears.

South, Serm. ix. 185.

He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow.

Denham, Sophy.

Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.
Addison, Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him
Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,
This better check gave.

Chapman.
Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim.
Shakspeare.

GRIM-FACED.* adj. [grim and face.]

Having a stern countenance.
Like the grim-fac'd god of war.

Mir. for Mug. p. 863.

GRIM-GRINNING.* adj. [grim and grin.]

Grimming horribly, as Milton expresses it, a ghastly smile.

Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides she Death,) Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean

To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath?
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

He, grim-grinning king,
Who catiffs scorns, and doth the blest surprise,
Late having deck'd with beauty's rose his tomb,
Disdains to crop a weed, and will not come.

Drummond, Madrigal.

GRIM-VISAGED.* adj. [grim and visage.]

Grimfaced. Apparently a favourite expression of our old poets; one of whom Gray has literally followed, in the fine application of it to Despair.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Death-darting pestilence did seem to slide,
Grim-visag'd, like the grizly dreaded night.

Mir. for Mug. p. 777.

I, for my part, grim-visaged goblin, do no more fear death than I fear my best bliss.

Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. p. 85.

Grim-visaged Despair.
Yarrington, Two Tragedies in One, (1601.)

Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair.

Gray, Ode on Eton Coll.

GRIMA'CE.† n. s. [French, from grim.]

Dr. Johnson.—Serenius, and Lye in his additions to Junius, refer the word to the Icel. grima, the skin of the face; but the former also says, that the Icel. gryma, a mask or hood, in which pilgrims concealed the face so as not to be known, affords the best root of grimace. Bishop Hurd says, that grimace, in the time of Addison, meant, simply, such a turn of the countenance as expressed acquaintance or civility; but because this air of complaisance was assumed, or was taken by our surly countrymen to be assumed, without meaning, the word came to be used, as it is now, in an ill sense, for any affected distortion of features. Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. iii. p. 170. note.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spard to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces!

Hudibras.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders.

South, Serm.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field.

L'Estrange.

The French nation is addicted to grimace.

Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face.

GRIM/LKIN. n. s. [gris, French, gray, and malin, or little Moll.] Gray little woman; the name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin.

Philips.

To GRIME.† v. a. [from the Icel. gryma, the mask, already noticed in grimace. See also Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. GRYMING. "Our peasants call him grimug, whose face is covered with spots of dirt, as if he used this as a mask." Ihre. Lex. Su. Goth. — Belg. griemen, to daub with spots.] To dirt; to sully deeply; to daub with filth.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blacket my loins, elf all my hair in knots.

GRIME.† n. s. [from the verb.] Dirt deeply insinuated; sullyng blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept; for why? she sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Shakespeare, Com. of Errors.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood.

Woodward on Fossils.

GRIMLY.* adj. [from grim.] Having a frightful or hideous look.

When it was grown to dark midnight,
And all were fast asleep,
In came Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at William's feet.

Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pestle.

GRIMLY.† adv. [Sax. grymlíce.] 1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beautiful prize,
Nor env'y'd Jove his sunshine and his skies.

Addison, Cato.

2. Sourly; suddenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

GRIMNESS.† n. s. [Sax. grymness] Horror; frightfulness of visage.

The grimness of her visage disguised, yet will it be fearful enough.

Bp. Kings, Thanks. Serm. (1619), p. 26.

GRIMY.* adj. [from grime.] Dirty; cloudy.

Mines of grimy coal low-rid.

Morse, Song of the Soul, Inf. of Worlds, st. 73.

To GRIN.† v. n. [gpenman, gpinman, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch; grina, Su. Goth. undoubtedly of the same origin with grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French. At first our own word was gren. "They grennyden with teeth on hym." Wicliffe, Acts, vii. 54. See also To GERN.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!

Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.

Shakespeare.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?

Shakespeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth.

Stilling fleet.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

Dryden, Æn.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view.

Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter and to frantic mirth. Prior.
Fools grin on fools, and Stoiclike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

GRIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him; in's face too.

— O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.

Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace.

Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?

One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. s. [gryne, gryn, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bird that hasteth to his gryn,
Not knowing the perile.

Chaucer.

The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him.

Job, xviii. 9.

To GRIND.† v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [gpinban, gexgruben, ground, Saxon; grenna, Icelandic; grincer, French. Our own word at first was grint or grinst. "There shall be weeping and gryntyng of teeth." Wicliffe, St. Luke, xiii. "Grynting of teeth." St. Matt. viii. "Grint with his teeth." Chaucer, C. T.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

St. Matt, xxi. 44.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal?

Bentley, Serm.

2. To comminute by the teeth or grinders.

Pierce famine is your lot for this misdeed,
Reduce'd to grind the plates on which you feed.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with Time, Slack time, said I,
Thy sith is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty to one too sharp do find it.

Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds.

Dryden, Fab.

4. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser, F. Q.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves.

Addison.

6. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for griding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries increas'd.

Dryden.

- To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses.

Milton, S. A.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws.

Rowe.

GRINDER.† n. s. [Sax. grymbere.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

Those manacles put upon him were exceedingly inconvenient for a grinder in a mill.

Smith on Old Age, p. 115.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone.

Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder.

Philips.

3. [Γριψ-τοδαρ.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds : sharp, as the fore-teeth ; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders ; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds ;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks ; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey.

Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments.

Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances ; therefore herbivorous animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much.

Arbutnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders tried.

Dryden, Juv.

Both he brought ;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught.

Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. } n. s. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France ;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones.

B. Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them ; but grind them on a grindstone till bright.

Mozon.

GRINNER. n. s. [from grin.] One that grins.

The frightful'st grinner

Be the winner.

Addison, Spect. No. 173.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP.† n. s. [Sax. græp, from græpan, to dig.] A little ditch, or trench. Not peculiar to the north of England, as Ray states ; but of general use.

Another will make the grip or foss of the ditch serve for the area of his habitation.

Phil. Survey of the South of Ireland.

To GRIP.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into ditches ; to drain. "Gripped is delved to draw away water." Yorkshire Glossary.

GRIP, or GRIFE.* n. s. [Lat. gryps. See GRIFFIN.] The fabulous animal called the griffon, as Barret defines it ; and,
as Huloet the older lexicographer explains it, "the grype bird." This squares with the old Gothic greip, used for a bird of prey, probably a vulture.

An horrible cage for every foule byrde and fylltūe grype.

Anderson, Expos. upon Bened. (1573), fol. 45. b.

Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

To GRIFE.† v. a. [greipan, M. Goth. ; grifa, Su. Goth. ; gripan, Sax. ; grippen, Dutch ; old French, grip or gripe, both plunder and the hand ; and thus Ihe deduces grifa from grip, an old Gothic word also for the hand.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed ; to grasp ; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows.

Shakspeare, K. John.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold.

Dryden, Æn.

3. [gripper, French.] To catch eagerly ; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. To close ; to clutch.

Unlucky Welsted ! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.

Pope.

5. To pinch ; to press ; to squeeze.

A wondrous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Spens.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood ;
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws
in blood.

Dryden, Fab.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryd.

7. To afflict. This would now be con- sidered a ludicrous usage of the word ; but it was formerly not so. See the fourth sense of the substantive GRIFE.

Grief gripes me so, I pin'd away, and died.

Mtr. for Mag. p. 292.

Whom gripping sorrow doth so sore ataint.

Ibid. p. 447.

Grief gripes my heart, when I think that the Mars of men received his death's blow from a pen-maker, a pedagogue.

Stafford's Niobe, (1611), p. 145.

To GRIFE.† v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly- ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or grifyings in us.

Locke.

2. To pinch ; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less,
and grew stark beggars.

Fell.

3. [In naval language.] When a ship runs her head too much into the wind, she is said to gripe.

GRIFE.† n. s. [gripe, Sax. ; grip, old Goth.
and French. See To GRIFE.]

1. Grasp ; hold ; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatening with greedy gripe to do him dy.

Spenser, F. Q.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unliken hand.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Should I

Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol ; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.

Shakspeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

I fell ; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Squeeze ; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast ;

'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryd. Fab.

3. Oppression ; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. Affliction ; pinching distress.

Free from the gripes of sorrow every one.
Broume, Brit. Past. i. 3.

Adam, at the news

Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound !

Milton, P. L.

Canst thou bear cold and hunger ? Can these limbs,

Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the gripes of smarting poverty ? Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ache ; colick.

In the jaundice the cholera is wanting ; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes, with windiness.

Floyer.

6. [In naval language.] The compass or sharpness of the prow or stem of a ship under water. Dr. Scott and Dr. Ash have said the stern instead of the stem.

7. [In naval language.] Gripes is the name of a machine formed by an assem- blage of ropes, hooks, and dead eyes ; and used to secure the boats upon the deck of a ship at sea.

Chambers.

GRIPPER. n. s. [from gripe.] Oppressor ;
usurer ; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed us-urers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies.

Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPPING.* n. s. [from gripe.]

1. Pain arising from colick.

After certain grifyings, the wind and vapours, issuing forth, — distorted the mouth, bloated the cheeks, and gave the eyes a terrible kind of relieve.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 8.

2. Distress ; affliction.

Whether all the fictitious pleasures of sin can compensate for the acute tortures and grifyings of mind.

Killingbeck's Serm. (1790), p. 361.

GRIPINGLY. adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work grippingly.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

GRIPPLE.* adj. [from gripe, in the sense of pinching, meanly grasping or hoarding money. Dr. Johnson barely mentions griple as a substantive, and defines it "a greedy snatcher ; a gripping miser," to which he adds, without an example however, the name of Spenser. Spenser uses the word as an adjective, but not as a substantive.
And there are few words better authorized than this adjective ; but as a substantive I have no where found it.]

1. Greedy ; covetous ; unfeeling ; oppres- sive.

He gnash'd his teeth, to see
Those heapes of gold with griple covetse.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 31.

It is easy to observe, that none are so gripple
and hard-fisted as the childless.

By. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The insatiate slave—
That thrusts his gripple hand into her golden maw.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

The gripple wretch, who will bestow nothing on his poor brother for God's sake, is evidently an infidel, having none at all or very heathenish notions of God. Barrow, Works, i. 438.

To bestow aught in good earnest on the magistrate, we know your classic priestship is too griple; for ye are always begging.

Milton, Art. of Peace betw. E. of Orm. & Irish.

2. Grasping fast; tenacious.

On his shield he griple hold did lay,
And held the same so hard, that by no wise
He could him force to loose. Spens. F. Q. vi. iv. 6.

GRIPPLENESS.* n. s. [from griple.] Covetousness.

Age is not a more common plea than unjust:
The young man pretends it for his wanton and inordinate lust; the old, for his *griple*ness, tech-ness, loquacity: all wrongfully, and not without foul abuse. Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repelled, iii. § 10.

GRIS.* n. s. [Fr. gris; low Lat. griseum, "pellis animalis cuiusdam, quod vulgò vair Galli appellant." Du Cange.] A kind of fur; one of the better sorts of fur. See MINEVER.

I saw his sleeves purified at the hond
With gris, and that the finest of the lond.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

GRIS-A'MBER. n. s. Used by Milton for ambergrise.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd, Gris-amber steam'd. Milton, P. R.

GRISE.† n. s.

1. A swine. See GRICE.

2. A step, or scale of steps. See GREE and GREES. Barret writes it "grises or steps."

Let me speak like yourself; and lay a sentence,
Which as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shakespeare, Othello.

GRISE'TTE.* n. s. [French.] The wife or daughter of a tradesman.

She was the handsomest grisset I ever saw.
Sterne, Sentim. Journey.

GRISKIN.† n. s. [grisin, roast meat, Irish. Dr. Johnson.—This etymology may apply to a beef-steak when dressed, or to any other, as well as a griskin; and therefore, notwithstanding Lye endeavours to support it by adding that grisin may be from gris, fire, the etymology must be sought elsewhere; and there can be no question that it is from gris, grise, or grice, a swine.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled. Dr. Johnson says; in any way, it may be added, raw, fried, or roasted. It is not the cookery that confers the name.

GRISLED.* See GRIZZLED.

GRISLY.† adj. [gruphe, Sax.; azupran, to affright; griselig, Goth. horrible; grislega, Iceland. horribly. Bullock defines grisly also adverbially, viz. abominably, fearfully. Expos. ed. 1656. But I find no usage of it.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser, F. Q.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see.

Spenser.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The grisly face of a convicting conscience.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 41.

Back stepp'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.

Milton, P. L.

For that damnd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron. Milton, Comus.
The beautiful form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly sight.

Dryden, Fab.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race.

Dryden, State of Innocence.

Thus the grisly spectre spoke again. Dryd. Fab.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound.

Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear. Addison.

GRISONS.* n. s. Inhabitants of the mountainous parts of the Alps in Italy.

There is the noblest summer-prospect in the world from this walk, for you have a full view of a huge range of mountains that lie in the country of the Grisons, and are buried in snow.

Addison on Italy.

GRIST.† n. s. [gruft, Saxon; the past participle of geupfan, to crush. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water. Tusser, Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.

Miller of Trompington.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fall, if matter brings no grist.

Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. s. [grupcle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard,
as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the esophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinnny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilation of the gullet.

Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.

Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures.

More against Atheism.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like women's fans.

Ray on the Creation.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.

Grew.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.

GRIT.† n. s.

1. The coarse part of meal. [grut, grutta, Sax.; gruze, Teut.; grut, German; from gruft.]

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles. [grit,
Welsh; grout, Sax.; griot, gryt, Goth.]
Silesian bole, cracking a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap. Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marble.

Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with saltwater, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water.
This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocolle of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax.
The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

Hill on Fossils.

GRITH.* n. s. [Sax. grith, peace; Goth. grid; hence a grithstole was a sanctuary.] Agreement; union. Obsolete.

He bade his priests peace and grith.

The Plowman's Tale.

GRITTYNESS. n. s. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton, Opticks.

GRIZELIN. adj. [more properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate.

Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. s. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?

Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED.† adj. [from grizzle.] Inter- spersed with gray.

In the fourth chariot, grizzled and bay horses.

Zech. vi. 3.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head.

Shakespeare.

His beard was grizzled? — No,
It was as I have seen it in his life.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asses' ears to hide.

Dryden, Jew.

GR'ZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly.

Bacon.

To GROAN.† v. n. [zpanian, Saxon; gronen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Our word was at first used in the sense of grunt. To groin was the same. So the Iceland. grenian has the same meaning. "He groaneth as our boar." Chaucer, Somp. Tale. This will refer us to the Latin grunio. The northern pronunciation of groan is according to the Sax. zpane. See To GRAIN, and To GROIN.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare, Cæsar.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job, xxiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton, P. L.
Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains.

South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away.

Pope, Odyssey.

GROAN. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.
Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare, Macbeth.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive.

Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.

Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GRO'ANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad;
agonizing. Not used.

Adown he kest it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful
sound.

Spenser, F. Q.

GRO'ANING.* n. s. [Sax. zpanian.]

1. Lamentation; complaint on account of agony or pain.

To hear the groaning of the prisoner.
Psalm cii. 20.
He shall groan before him with the groanings
of a deadly wounded man. Ezek. xxx. 24.

Chambers.

2. [In hunting.] The cry or noise of a buck.
GROAT.† n. s. [groot, Dutch; grosso,
Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence. It was first coined by Edward III. A silver penny was the largest coin of silver before. Chaucer writes it grot.

To give five pence, grotos, or shillings, to five poor men. Fulke against Allen, (1580), p. 409.

Our piece of four-pence being formerly great, (even as great as a shilling now is, because then twenty pence, or five grotos weighed an ounce,) is called a grot.

Buller, Eng. Gramm. (1633.)
It often costs them two pence or a groat, before they can convey them [letters] to my hands.

Tatler, No. 164.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare, Cæsar.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden, Fab.
Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune.

Swift.

3. GROATS. [Sax. grutta, grut. See the second sense of GRIT.] Oatmeal, Yorkshire; oats hulled, but unground, Lancashire; more generally speaking, culled oats, half-ground. Oats that have the hulls taken off.

GRO'ATSWORTH.* n. s. [groat and worth.]
The value of a groat. Sherwood.

GRO'CER.† n. s. [This should be written grosser, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.

Dr. Johnson. — Though grossus means a green and not a dried fig; grossers or grocers were certainly dealers in foreign fruits and other foreign commodities.
See the Paston Letters, ii. 210. The merchants, called grossers, were accused of engrossing merchandise of all kinds,
Stat. 37 Edw. III. ch. 5. See Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 291. Our lexicography of more than two centuries since describes the grocers as those "who sell by the great." Hulot.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts, Logick.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.

Garth.

GRO'CERY. n. s. [from grocer.] Grocers'
ware, such as tea; sugar; raisins; spice.

His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GROG.* n. s. [in the language of our seamen.] Gin and water, or any spirit and water; usually without sugar.

We stopped serving grog, except on Saturday nights. Cook and King's Voyage.

GRO'GGY.* adj. [from grog.] In the merry language of the seamen, to whom we are indebted for the word punch as well as grog, rather overflowed with grog.

GRO'GERAM.† n. s. [gros, grain, French;
GRO'GRAM. } grossogranus, low Latin.

GRO'GRAN. } Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your groggeram. Donne.

He shall ha' the groggers at the rate I told him.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

I'll give you a new gown,
A new silk groggeram gown.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Natolia affords great store of chamelots and groggerams. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, groggram, or the like. Brown.

Whether alum doth intenerate the hairs of wool, and hairstuf, as groggers.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 289.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in groggram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade.

Addison, Spect.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her groggram gown. Swift.

GROIN.† n. s. [probably from the Goth.
and Icel. grein, distinctio.] The part next above the thigh.

Antiplex, a sonne of Priam, threw
His lance at Ajax through the preasse, which went by him, and flew

On Leucus, and woe Ulysses' friend; his groine it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.

GROIN.* n. s. [French, groin de porceau, the snout of a hog. Cotgrave.] The nose or snout of a swine. This is still a northern word.

Salomon likeneth a faire woman, that is a fool of hire body, to a ring of gold that is worne in the groine of a sow. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

To GROIN.* v. n. [Sax. zpanian; Icel. grenian; old French, groigner; Lat. grunio.
See To GROAN.] To grumble; to growl; to grunt.

Bears that groynd continually.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 27.

GRO'MWELL. n. s. [lithospermum, Latin.]
Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM.† n. s. [The original word, in all its senses, is gome or gom, a man;
zuma, Sax.; guma, Goth. See GOM, BRIDEGROOM, and MAN. Dr. Jamieson considers the r as existing only in the Scottish and English groom or grome; but Kilian gives us the Teut. grom, a youth.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser, F. Q.

From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Faifas.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room.

Donne.

In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peachment.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of saucy grooms?

Dryden, Don. Sebast.

Amid the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume for to intreat this groom,
And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.
Thou that art
The prime of our young grooves, even the top
Of all our lusty shepherds.

3. A man newly married.

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast.

Dryden.
To GROOVE.† v. a. [grafa, Iceland.
ḡrapan, Saxon, to dig.] To cut hollow.
Of the box every joint was well groov'd. Swift.
GROOVE.† n. s. [groof, Iceland. from grafa, to dig; ḡrapan, Saxon.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them.

Moxon, Mech. Exerc.

GROO'VER.* n. s. [from groove.] A miner.
Derbyshire. Grose.

To GROPE.† v. n. [Saxon, ḡrapian, ḡrapian; and grape is our northern dialect for grope: the word has the same origin as gripe, to lay hold of. See To GRIBE. Our northern word is grape.]
To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark
Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes. Is. ix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grope at noon, as if involv'd with night.

Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grope after knowledge; as St.
Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd.
Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grope and guess no more, but see my way.

Arbutnot.

To GROPE.† v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see. This appears to be the most ancient usage of the word.

Thyn enterdite, and thy sentence
Again thyn own conscience,

Hereafter thou shalt fele and grope,
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

These curates ben so negligent and slow
To gropen tenderly a conscience.

Chaucer, Symm. Tale.

How vigilant to grope men's thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain.

Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.

GRO'PER.* n. s. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark. Sherwood.

GRO'SER.* n. s. Our northern word for a gooseberry. See GOOSEBERRY.

GROSS.† adj. [gros, Fr. grosso, Ital.
crassus, Lat.]

1. Thick; bulky.

VOL. II.

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Baker on Learning.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wise and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin.

Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dullness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is asham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do'st not. Shakspeare, All's well.
Examples gross as earth exhort me.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton, P. L.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the *gross*est sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Spratt.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roscat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson, Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated; not pure.

It is manifest that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the *gross*er, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the *gross*er medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Of elements,

The *gross*er feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton, P. L.

Light fumes are merry, *gross*er fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad.

Dryden, Fab.

Or suck the mists in *gross*er air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in the blood?
Davies.

And, in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear.

Milton, Comus.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; not delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance.

Wotton, Architecture.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fell.

9. Whole; having no deduction or abatement: as, the gross sum; the gross price.

10. Large; aggregate.

Another part in squadrons, and gross bands, bend

11. Heavy; oppressive.

Curs'd be the wit which cruelty refines,
Or to his father's rod the scorpion joins;
Your finger is more gross than the great monarch's loins.

Dryden, Hind and Panth. P. iii.

GROSS. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep cut heels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one.

Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle,
you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison, Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbott, Descript. of the World.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: the general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move.

Dryden, K. Arthur.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things.

Bacon, Essays.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [grosse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSS-HEADED.* adj. [gross and head.] Stupid; dull; thick-sculled.

This was it, to pluck out of the heads of his admirers the conceit that all, who are not prelati-cal, are gross-headed, thick-witted, illiterate, shallow.

Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

GRO'SSLY.† adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverised.

The cane did again appear with a linen hanging thereat, so grossly impregnated, as it promised to be delivered of a most happy burthen: both cane and linen bent themselves on me, and in them I found another paper and a hundred ducats in gold. Shelton, Don Quix. iv. 13.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together, As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose; Working so grossly in a natural cause, That admiration did not whoop at them.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

And thine eyes See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour, That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What I are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it? — Speak not so grossly. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton, Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. s. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance, Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shaks.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so, That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then, all this earthly grossness quit, Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit, Triumphant over death. Milton, Ode on Time.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton, Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known 'Till opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakspeare.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears. Richardson, Clarissa.

- GROT.† n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Sax. grœp, a ditch; grop, Su. from groepa, to excavate; whence grot, q. d. groepet, hollowed. Serenius. — In like manner, Mr. H. Tooke considers grot as formed from grapan, to dig. Menage derives it from the Gr. κρύπτην, a place of concealment, as grot, in our language, seems originally to have meant, from κρύβειν, to hide; whence also crypt. The low Lat. grotta was used in this sense. In French the word was also formerly crot or crotte, and crotesque. See Cotgrave.] A cave; a place of concealment; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

There is another grott, or cavern, lying low underneath; it is contrived into the fashion of a cross, and here some of the Holy Innocents lie buried. Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 108.

God hath appointed a day wherein He will judge the secrets of men, that sin may not be the more secure for being close, but that it may be feared and shunned in grotts as well as in most publick places. Granville, Sermon, p. 313.

My lord had many grotts about his house, cut in the sandy sides of hills, wherein he delighted to sit and discourse. Aubrey's Anecd. ii. 475.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot, Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE.† adj. [grotesque, French; grotesco, Italian. From the strange and extravagant figures which were painted in the grottos or crypts of the ancient Romans.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

By rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 138.

The champagne head Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton, P. L.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew, Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true, And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors, Grotesco roof, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTESQUE.* n. s. A wild design of a painter or engraver.

Painters — sometimes do serve themselves of instances that have no existence in nature. — What indeed was more common and familiar among the Romans themselves than the picture and statue of Terminus, even one of their deities; which yet, if we well consider, is but a piece of grotesca?

Farce is that in poetry, which grotesque is in a picture. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

All the designs I have chanced to meet of the temptations of St. Antony, were rather a sort of wild grotesques, than any thing capable of producing a serious passion. Burke on the Sublime and Beautiful.

GROTESQUELY.* adv. [from grotesque.] In a wild, fantastical manner.

Death has despoiled the jester of his habiliments, and grotesquely decorated himself therewith. Expl. of Holbein's Dance of Death, p. 49.

GROTTA.* n. s. [Italian.] A cavern for coolness or pleasure.

Let it be turned to a grotta, or place of shade. Bacon, Ess. (1632), p. 263.

She turned into another walk, which led to a grotta. Moral State of Eng. (1670), p. 153.

GROTTA. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grottos run, The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE.† n. s. [Sax. grœwe; Germ. grove; Goth. grof.] A small wood, or place set with trees.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought The wood began to move: You see it coming; I say a moving grove. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love, Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast, While every gale is peace and every grove Is melody? Thomson, Spring.

To GROVEL.† v. n. [grufde, Icelandic, flat on the face. It may, perhaps, come by gradual corruption from ground fell. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Icel. verb gruva, to lie prostrate on the ground. Lye.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought, And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground Spenser, F. Q.

He grovelling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser, F. Q.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem, Incas'd with all the honours of the world! If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face, Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Oke-mast and beech, and cornell fruit they cate, Grovelling like swine on earth, in lowest sort. Chapman.

Now they lie Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton, P. L.

Upon thy belly grovelling thou shalt go. Milton, P. L.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim what'er he can express; His grovelling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and grovelling. Addison, Spect.

GROVELLER.* n. s. [from grovel.] A person of a low, mean, grovelling disposition.

The man of a towering ambition, or a well regulated taste, has fewer objects to envy or to covet than the grovellers. Shenstone.

GROVES.* n. s. pl. The northern word for what is elsewhere called graves. See the second sense of GRAVE. And Brockett's N. C. words.

GROUND.† n. s. [grunð, Saxon; grondt, Danish; grundus, M. Goth. "consentientibus omnibus dialect. Scytho-Scandiacis." Serenius.]

1. The earth considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea.
Ex. xiv. 16.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground.

Milton, P. L.

From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous.

Milton, P. L.

A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton, P. L.
And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground.
Jeremiah.
There was dew upon all the ground.
Judges, vi. 40.

They summ'd their wings, and, soaring th' air
sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground.
Dryden, Æn.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.

On heavenly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss.

Milton, P. L.

With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton, P. L.

5. Estate; possession.

Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds;
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own.

Dryden, Juv.

6. Land occupied.

The rains o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Prior.
7. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground?

St. Matt. xv. 35.

Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown, Travels.

8. Depth; bottom. [af-groundith, the deep, Goth. St. Luke, viii. 31.]

In the ground of the sea. Lib. Fest. fol. 9. b.

9. Dregs; lees; fæces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors. In the plural only.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or groggs. Mortimer.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal.

Sharp, Surgery.

10. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Hakewill.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds,

as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

11. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

A well wrought heav'n of silk and gold was spread.
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright.

Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

12. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

13. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

14. The first principles of knowledge.

The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in.

Preface to Accidence.

Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly.

Hammond.

After evening repasts, till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture.

Milton, on Education.

15. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness and good news the argument of his sorrow.

Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection,
my method shall be, to examine in the first place,
the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known.

Milton, P. L.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures.

Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well.

Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true.

Dryden.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it.

Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

16. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.

17. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.
Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground.

While ours with easy victory were crown'd.
Dryden.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Condé a the battle of Seneffe.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

18. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from the river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels,
Homeward returning. Milton, P. L.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory.

Addison, Spect.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment.

Addison.

19. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

20. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs space, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

21. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.

22. Formerly the pit of a play-house; and hence groundling, in a contemptuous sense. See GROUNDLING.

Stage-keeper. The understanding gentlemen o'
the ground here asked my judgement.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

To GROUND, † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place or set in the ground.

And friendship which a faint affection breeds
Without regard of good, dies like ill grounded seeds. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 1.

2. To fix on the ground. A kind of military phrase; as, to ground arms.

When the fans are thus discharged, the word of command in course is to ground their fans.

Addison, Spect. No. 102.

3. To found, as, upon cause, reason, or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodox primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other Christian holidays upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryden, Aurengezebe.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

4. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.

GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground

And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras.
GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. s. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as a greiv. Dryden, Æn.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GROUND-BAIT. n. s. [ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Walton, Angler.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. s. [ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. s. [hedera terrestris, Lat.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. s. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops either of hase or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a groundoak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mortimer.

GROUND-PINE. n. s. [chamæpitys, Lat.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road-sides. Hill, Mat. Med.

GROUND-PLATE. n. s. [In architecture.]

The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer, and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summers, and beams. Mortimer.

GROUND-PLOT.† n. s.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

A ground-plot square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building.

Men skilled in architecture might do what we did not attempt; they might probably form an exact ground-plot of this venerable edifice. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

GROUND-RENT. n. s. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins.

The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n;
'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GROUND-ROOM. n. s. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler.

GROUND-TACKLE.* n. s. In naval language, the anchor, cables, and whatsoever else is necessary, to make the ship ride safe at anchor in a proper ground.

GROUNDAGE.* n. s. [from ground.] A custom, or tribute, paid for the standing of a ship in port. Blount.

It is ordinary to take custom for anchorage, groundage, &c. Spelman.

GROUNDLEDLY.† adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles; upon good grounds.

Whether he performed hys former promyse—that can I not groundedly tell.

Bale, in Leland's N. Year's Gift, sign. H. 2.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glannville.

GROUNDLESS.† adj. [Sax. grynblearj.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may show how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them of being averse to our national worship. Freeholder.

GROUNDLESSLY.† adv. [from groundless.]

Without reason; without cause; without just reason

This principle of feignedly or groundlessly conceiting. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

To doubt and deny thus groundlessly, and licentiously, or peevishly, is not so much properly to doubt, as plainly to show an unwillingness we have that the thing we dispute about should be true; which is cowardly and disingenuous.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

GROUNDLESSNESS.† n. s. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

I shall close up this chapter with remarking the groundlessness of that tradition, which makes Mahumed to be put into an iron chest, that, by the force of loadstones, hangs in the air.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 81.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falsehood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GROUNDLING.† n. s. [from ground: German, grunzel; Teut. gruendling.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the vulgar. See the last sense of the substantive GROUND.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious perriwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rats, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

We tilers may deserve to be senators; And there we must step before you thick-skin'd tanners,

For we are born three stories high: no base ones, None of your groundlings, master. Beaumont and Fl. The Prophetess.

GROUNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use.

A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Ascham.

GROUNDSEL. n. s. [gryunb and pile, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

GROUNDSEL.† n. s. [senecio, Lat.; gryunbe-pelze, gryunbe-pulie, Saxon; and our old lexicography writes this word groundswell, as well as groundsell. See Sherwood's Dict.] A plant.

Groundsell leaves, laid to with fine powder of frankincense, heale wounded sinewes.

Barret, Alvo. (1580.)

GROUNDWORK. n. s. [ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden, Fob.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton on Education.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser on Ireland. The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. † n. s. [groupe, French; grappo, Italian, a knot, or cluster.] An assemblage of two or more figures of men, beasts, fruit, or the like, which have some apparent relation to each other in painting or sculpture; hence, generally, a cluster; a collection; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden, Duffrenoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.

You should try your graving tools
On this odious group of fools. Swift.

This group of isles is, to use Mr. Waller's expression, walled round with rocks, which render them inaccessible to pirates or enemies.

Bp. Berkeley, Prop. for Coll. in Berm. (1725.)
But here, thou say'st, the miseries of life
Are huddled in a group. Young, Night Th. 8.

To GROUP. † v. a. [grouper, Fr.] To put into a distinct or separate collection.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. † n. s. [perhaps from gorse. See GORCOCK.] A kind of fowl; a heathcock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house
For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

'Ασπασίας τέον ὕδρας ἰκάνουσαι.*

The first part though calculated only for the meridian of grubstreet, was yet taken notice of by the better sort. Arbuthnot.

I'd sooner ballads write, and grubstreet lays.

Gay.

To GRUDGE.† v. a. [from gruger, according to Skinner, which in French is to grind or eat. In this sense we say of one who resents any thing secretly, he chews it. Grwgnach, in Welsh, is to murmur; to grumble. Grunigh, in Scotland, denotes a grumbling morose countenance. Dr. Johnson. — Our word is from the old Fr. grouchier, to murmur, to grumble, to complain. See also To GRUTCH.]

1. To envy; to see any advantage of another with discontent.

What means this banishing me from your counsels? Do you love your sorrow so well, as to grudge me part of it. Sidney.

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut of my train.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began.

Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grud'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward.

Dryden.

Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging, uncommunicative disposition. Spectator.

Let us consider the exhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudged the great share that it takes of the surface or the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God. Bentley.

I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Swift.

2. To give or take unwillingly.

Let me at least a funeral marriage crave,
Nor grudge my cold embraces in the grave.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

They have grudged those contributions, which have set our country at the head of all the governments of Europe. Addison.

To GRUDGE.† v. n.

1. To murmur; to repine.

They knew the force of that dreadful curse, whereunto idolatry maketh subject; nor is there cause why the guilty sustaining the same should grudge or complain of injustice. Hooker.

We do not grudge or repine at our portion, but are contented with those circumstances which the providence of God hath made to be our lot. Nelson.

2. To be unwilling; to be reluctant.

You steer betwixt the country and the court,
Nor gratify whate'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryden, Fab.

3. To be envious.

Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned. James, v. 9.

4. To feel compunction; to grieve. Obsolete.

5. To wish in secret. A low expression. See the third sense of GRUDGING.

6. To give or have any uneasy remains. I know not whether the word in this sense be not rather grugeons, or remains; grugeons being the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve, Dr. Johnson says, citing the lines from Dryden which exhibit grudging as a substantive. See GRUDGING. Grudging in this sense, means the symptom or forerunner of a disease; not the remains.

GRUDGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Old quarrel; inveterate malevolence; sullen malice.

Many countries about her were full of wars, which, for old grudges to Corinth, where thought still would conclude there. Sidney.

The god of wit, to shew his grudge,
Clapt ass's ears upon the judge. Swift.

3. Unwillingness to benefit.

Those to whom you have
With grudge prefer'd me. B. Jonson, Catiline.

4. Envy; odium; invidious censure.

5. Remorse of conscience. Ainsworth.

6. Some little commotion, or forerunner of a disease. Ainsworth.

GRUDGEONS.* n. s. pl. [Cotgrave and Sherwood write it grudgions; Dr. Johnson, grugeons, in the fifth definition of the neuter verb grudge. The word is probably from the Fr. gruger, esgruger, to crumble, to break into small pieces.] Coarse meal; the part of corn which remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.

You that can deal with grudgings and coarse flour. Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

GRUDGER.* n. s. [from grudge.] A murmurer; an envious or discontented person.

GRUDGING.* n. s. [from grudge.]

1. Discontent; envy at the prosperity of others.

The murmurs, and the grudgings, that lie festering in many men's hearts. South, Sermon, viii. 77.

2. Reluctance; unwillingness.

Use hospitality to one another without grudging. 1 Pet. iv. 9.

Many times they go with as great grudging to serve in his majesty's ships, as if it were to be slaves in the galleys. Raleigh.

3. A secret wish or desire.

Ey'n in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave. Dryden, Medal.

4. A forerunner or symptom of disease.

The smart or feeling of the sting of conscience is as sensible and lively a prognostick of the worm which never dieth, as heaviness of spirit, or grudgings, are of fevers or other diseases.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 528.

My Dolabella,

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever? Dryden.

GRUDGINGLY.† adv. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignantly; reluctantly.

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver.

2 Cor. ix. 7.

Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;
Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord:
The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;
Then drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd. Dryden.

GRUEL.† n. s. [gruan, gruelle, French, from grus, corn-broth; grut, Saxon; gruan, Norw. pottage of oats and barley.] Food made by boiling oatmeal in water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

Upon the strength of water gruel? Prior.

Gruel made of grain, broths, malt-drink not much hopped, posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth. Arbuthnot.

GRUFF.† adj. [groff, Dutch; grof, Su. Goth.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend, in hideous order, sat
Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,
Gruff discontent, through ignorance misled. Garth.

They had no titles of honour among them but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection; as, such an one the tall, such an one the stocky, such an one the gruff. Addison, Spect. No. 433.
Zeno himself, the father of Stoicism, as gruff as he looked, might have enlarged our writer's catalogue for some very free thoughts. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 49.

GRUFFLY. adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the god. Dryden, Fab.

GRUFFNESS.† n. s. [from gruff.] Rudeness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

No gruffness, I beseech you; use them civilly, and stick to your point.

Let. to Alter. (sup. from Smald.) Ep. Cor. i. 17.

GRUM.† adj. [contracted from grumble, and a low word, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Arbuthnot. It is no other, however, than grim; Sax. zgam. See GRIM.] Sour; surly; severe. I found Sir Thomas Lee, who was very grum; and we had very little discourse.

Ld. Clarendon's Diary, p. 282.

Nick looked sour and grum, and would not open his mouth. Arbuthnot.

To GRUMBLE.† v. n. [grommelen, grommen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the old French, gromelen. Both may be referred to the Cimbr. grem, murmur.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bridegroom,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Shakespeare.

Thou grumblest and raillest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Th' accurst Philistian stands on th' other side,
Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride. Cowley.

Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due. South.

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not. L'Estrange.

L'Avare, not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more. Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,
Yet, pinch'd with raging hunger, scours away;
Hunts in the face of danger all the day;
At night, with sullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey. Dryden.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.

Didst thou never see a drum? Canst thou make this grumble? Beaum. & Fl. The Pilgrim.
Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice. Mottoux.

Like a storm

That gathers black upon the frowning sky,
And grumbles in the wind. Rowe, Royal Convert.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted.

The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due consistence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green.

Arbutnot on Diet.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. s. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wiseman, Surgery.

GRUNDEL.* n. s. Another name for the fish called a groundling.

GRUNSEL. n. s. [More usually grounsil, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon gþunb.] The groundsil; the lower part of the building.

Next came one

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsil edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers.

Milton, P. L.

To GRUNT.† } v. n. [grunio, Latin;
To GRUNTLE.† } gþunan, Saxon; gre-
nia, Icel. gronder, grongner, Fr. See To GROAN. Gront in Chaucer is the pret. of groan, which Mr. Malone, in a note on the use of grunt by Shakspeare in Hamlet, has mistaken for the word before us. The sense of grunt for groan, however, which Dr. Johnson has here overpassed, is very ancient in our language.]

1. To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.
Shakspeare.

Pensive in mud they wallow all alone,
And snore and gruntle, to each other's moan.
D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal, i. 1.
The brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade.

Tickell.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies:
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round.

Swift.

2. To groan.

Those persons, I waraunt, as well pleased shall be all,
As wood Rome shall grunte at the rubbynge on the gall.

Defence of Peace, (1533,) To the Boke.

Who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life?
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GRUNT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of a hog.

Swine's snouts, swine's bodies, took they, bristles, grunts. Chapman.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break.

Dryden.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden, En.

2. A groan.

For you, like me, have lost your sole relief.

Gay, Pastorals.

GRUNTINGLY.* adv. [from grunting.]
Murmuringly; mutteringly. Sherwood.

GRUNTLING. n. s. [from grunt.] A young hog.

To GRUTCH.† v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge, Dr. Johnson says; which is a great mistake. For grutch is the oldest form of our word grudge, and is used by Wicliffe in his translation of the New Testament, as also by Gower and Chaucer; and is regularly adopted from the old French grouchier. Grutch is yet used in colloquial language.] To envy; to repine;
to be discontented.

Jesus witing at himself, that his disciples gruchiden of this thing, seide to them, this thing sclaundrith you. Wicliffe, St. John, vi. 61.

What aileth you to grutchen thus and grieve?

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prologue.

He knewe the names well of tho,
The whiche ageine him grutched so.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Lest some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tusser, Husb.
But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If't chance to me, I must not grutch. B. Jonson.
GRUTCH. n. s. [from the verb.] Malice;
ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras.

GRY.† n. s. [γρῦ. Gr.] Any small thing;
a thing of little or no value; a small measure.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch. Locke.

GRY'PHON.* See GRIFFIN. Milton writes it gryphon, P. L. ii. 943.

GRYTH.* See GRITH.

GUA'AIACUM.† n. s. A medicinal wood.

Guaiaicum is attenuant and aperient.
It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiaicum.
Hill.

The acid spirit in tar-water possesseth the virtues,
in an eminent degree, of that of guaiaicum,
and other medicinal woods. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 47.

GUARANTEE.† n. s. [garant, French.
The substantive and the verb are indifferent written guarantee, and guar-ranty.]

1. A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings: and he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Lesley.

2. Engagement to secure the performance of articles.

It was made in contradiction to the engagements that the crown of England had taken, when King William gave his guaranty to the treaty of Travendhall. Ld. Bolingbroke.

To GUA'RANTY.† v. a. [garantir, French.]

To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

France hath always profited skillfully of its having guaranteed the treaty of Munster.

Ld. Chesterfield.

Publick treaties made under the sanction; and some of them guaranteed by the sovereign powers of other nations. Burke on French Affairs.

To GUARD.† v. a. [garder, French;
from our word ward, the w being changed by the French into g; as Galles for Wales. Dr. Johnson.—The French probably adopted it from the low Lat.
warda, or garda. Goth. varda, and wardian. See To WARD.]

1. To watch by way of defence and security.

Who by stealth

Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd
The guarded gold. Milton, P. L.

To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryd.
The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms. Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.

One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to.

Addison, Spect.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Broomo on the Odyssey.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders.

Give him a livery

More guarded than his fellows.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

See a fellow

In a long motley, guarded with yellow.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

6. Minsheu says, that "the gard of a garment" is so called, "because it guards and keeps the garment from tearing." It is not, however, improbable that gard (for so our old authors write it) is, in this sense, another form of gird, to fasten by binding. See To GIRD. Yet
Dr. Johnson makes no distinction.

How brave is he? in a garded coat?

B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

Some of you have not your rich suits garded.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Within this year or two, I hope we shall be called to be examiners, wear politick gowns garded with copper lace, making great faces full of fear and office. Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

The guary-miracle (in English a miracle-play) is a kind of interlude, compiled in Cornish out of some Scripture-history, with that grossness which accompanied the Romans' vetus comedia.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall

GUAIA'VA.† n. s. An American fruit.

GUA'VA.† The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that, being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

To GUBE'RNATE.* v. a. [Lat. gubernō.]
To govern. Cockeram.

GUBERNATION. n. s. [gubernatio, Lat.]
Government; superintendency; superior direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

GUBE'RNATIVE.* adj. [from gubernate.]
Governing; ruling.

He talked to him of real and gubernative wisdom. Hackel's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693,) p. 39.
GU'DGEON.† n. s. [goujon, French. Our own word was formerly gogoon, or gogoon. Hulot's Dict.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbot's dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

2. A man easily cheated.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurements: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Shakspeare. The old phrase, it may be added, was "to swallow a gudgeon," i. e. to be deceived, est're befflé. Sherwood's Dict.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Such as Gregory or Bede were, who being honest, and withal credulous, and trusting others, swallowed many a gudgeon.

Favour, Antiq. over Noveltie, (1619,) p. 96.
Buchanan would not swallow that gudgeon of a British consul.

Bp. Lloyd, Hist. of Ch. Gov. in Gr. Brit. (1684,) Pref.
4. An iron pin on which a wheel turns.

Many times the iron gudgeons grow hot for want of greasing.

Hist. of making Gunpowder, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 281.

GUE'LDER-ROSE.* See GELDER-ROSE.

GUELF.* n. s. pl. The name of a faction in Italy, formerly opposed to that of the Ghibellines. See GIBELLINES.

Italy was long torn in pieces by the Guefs and Ghibellines. Addison, Spect. No. 125.

GUERDON.† n. s. [guerdon, French; from the Teut. werd, or wurth, price, value.] A reward; a recompence, in a good and bad sense. A word now rarely if at all used.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to be.

Spenser, F. Q.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive
The just guerdon of all his former villanies. Knolles.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.

To GUERDON.* v. a. [old Fr. guerdonner; and one of our own oldest verbs. Chaucer uses it.] To reward. Obsolete.

We vow to guerdon it with such due grace,
As shall become our bounty, and thy place.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

GUERDONABLE.* adj. [from guerdon.]
Worthy of reward. Obsolete.

Finding it as well guerdonable, as grateful, to publish their libels.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 75.

GUERDONLESS.* adj. [guerdon and less.] Unrewarded. Obsolete. Bullokar.

Guerdonless he past.

Chaucer, Compl. of the Bl. Knight, ver. 400.

To GUESS.† v. n. [ghissen, Dutch; ghissen, German. Junius refers to the Danish giette, to make conjecture; Serenius, to the Saxon gæcan, to divine, from the Goth. gaeta, whence the Icel. giska, q. d. gaetska. Lye, however, prefers the Irish geasam, to conjecture, to divine.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgement.

Incapable and shallow innocents!

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Shakspeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment?

Roleigh, Hist.

Their issue swarming bands

Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxcallan enemies I guess.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.

Stilllingfleet.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgement.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart.

Locke.

GUESS. n. s. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgement without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.

Shakspeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell, Life of Hammond.

A poet must confess

His art's like physics, but a happy guess. Dryden.
It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess;
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUE'SSER. n. s. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crochét,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet,
Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.
I have a letter guessingly set down.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GUEST.† n. s. [gæst, gæst, gæst, Saxon; gast, Goth. giestr, Icel. gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

St. Luke, xix. 7.

Methinks a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Tell my royal guest

I add to his commands my own request.

Dryden, Æn.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O desarts, desarts! how fit a guest am I for you,
since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakspeare.

To GUEST.* v. n. To be entertained in the house or at the table of another.

A young man at that time guested in her father's house. Heywood, Hierarch. of Angels, 1635, p. 479.

GUE'STCHAMBER. n. s. [guest and chamber.]
Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? St. Mark, xiv. 14.

GUE'STRITE. n. s. [from guest and rite.]
Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear

A gift esteem'd of it, that he would not bear
In his black fleets that guest-rite to the war.

Chapman.

GU'ESTWISE.* adv. [guest and wise.] In the manner of a guest.

My heart with her, but as guest-wise, sojourn'd.
Shakspeare, Mid. Night Dream.

To GU'GGLE. v. n. [gorgogghare, Italian.]
To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GU'IDABLE.* adj. [from guide.] That may be governed by counsel.

A submissive and guidable spirit, a disposition easy to all.

Sprat, Serm. before the King, (1676,) p. 11.

GU'DAGE. n. s. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GU'DANCE. n. s. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.

Atterbury.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking.

Rogers.

This to the young — but thy experience'd age

Wants not the guidance of a former sage.

Sewell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party.

Swift.

To GUIDE.† v. a. [guider, French; guier, guyier, old French; whence our ancient word gie for guide. See To GIE. Serenius traces guide to the Icel. gaeta, the diminutive of gae, to take heed.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth.

St. John, xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers.

Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up.

Kettlewell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.

Psalm xxxi. 3.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house.

Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. s. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey.

Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than led by a false guide to err by day?

Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide.

Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God, by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation.

Fearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work.

Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide.

Dryden, Fab.

GUIDELESS.† adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or superintendant.

Thus leave this guideless realm an open prey

To endless storms, and waste of civil war.

Sackville, Corbadoe, v. 2. (1561.)

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.

Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.

Dryden.

GUIDEPOST.* n. s. [guide and post.] A post, where two or more roads meet, directing the traveller which to follow.

Great men are the guideposts and marks in the state.

Burke, Sp. on Americ. Taxation.

GUIDER.† n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, meaning as to the preceding sense. But guiders are still applied to the word tendons in the north of England. Craven Dialect.

Our guide come! to the Roman camp conduct us.

Shakespeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chururgeon, and providence for the guide of his hand.

South.

GUIDERESS.* n. s. [from guider.] She who guides or directs. Obsolete.

In earthe alone to be thy gyddresse.

Caxton, Pilgrimage of the Soul, (1482.)

Ah! fickle and blind guidress of the world,
What pleasure hast thou in my misery?

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

GUIDON.† n. s. [French; from guider, to direct, to shew.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

On the east wall hangs his target, coat of arms and crest, and near unto them a guidon of the Order of the Bath.

Ashmole, Berk. ii. 377.

GUILD.† n. s. [Saxon, gylb, tribute, from gilban, to pay; fraternities originally contributing sums towards a common stock; gylbcrpe, a fellowship, a corporation. The word is found in various tongues; old French gilde, société, Lacombe; Teut. gilde, societates contributionum, Kilian; Icel. gilde, convivium, symposium, Serenius. The last as perhaps a disorderly meeting, deviating from the original plan of sober combination into the extravagancies of unrestrained festivity.]

1. A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.

Cowel.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

As when the long-eard'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple-bolled gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. A townhall.

The room was longe and wyde,

As it some gyeld or solemne temple were.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 43.

GUIDABLE.* adj. [from guild.] Liable to tax.

By the discretion of the sheriffs, and bailiff, and other ministers, in places guidable.

Spelman, Adm. Jur.

GUILDHALL.* n. s. [from guild.] The hall in which a corporation usually assembles; a townhall.

The mayor towards guildhall hies him in all post.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Towards three or four o'clock,

Look for the news that the guildhall affords.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GUILLE.† n. s. [guile, gille, old French the same with wile. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. gylhan, ge-gylhan, to conjure, to divine; consequently, he says, to practise cheat and imposture. Div. of Purley, ii. 324.—The Dutch gylen, the low German, begyeln, to beguile, and the Su. Goth. gilia, to deceive, to entrap in snares, must be also remembered; Icel. viel, deception. Barbazan says, that the old French word is derived from the Arabick, and that it was anciently written ghilé. Diss. sur la Langue Fran. Our word is rarely used in the plural, but it occurs in Shelton's Transl. of Don Quixote, P. iv. ch. vi. "If his guiles be not at the beginning detected." Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor.

Spenser, F. Q.

Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile.

St. John, i. 47.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Mill, P. L.
Nor thou his malice and false guile contend:
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels.

Milton, P. L.

To GUILLE.* v. a. [Fr. guiller, guiler; which Barbazan deduces from the Lat. velare.] To disguise cunningly; to conceal.

For who wotes not that woman's subtilties
Can gyulen Argus? Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 7.
Is it repentance,

Or only a fair shew to guile his mischiefs?

Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

GUILLED.* adj. [from guile.] Treacherous; deceiving. Not proper.

Thus ornament is but the guiled shorie
To a most dangerous sea. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

GUILFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile.

Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton, P. L.

The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay.

Thus Andronicus.

GUILEFULLY.† adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

He cannot be excused, in that he caused not his friends to restore the money which they had guilefully borrowed. Hakew. on Providence, p. 311.
To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd.

Milton, P. L.

GUILEFULNESS.† n. s. [from guileful.]

Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

Sherwood.

GUILELESS.† adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

And the plain ox,
That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
In what has he offended? Thomson, Spring.
I chas'd the guileless daughters of the plain,
Nor dropp'd the chase, till Jesse was my prey.
Shenstone, Elvg. 26.

GUILELESSNESS.* n. s. [from guileless.] Freedom from deceit; pure honesty and innocence.GUILER.† n. s. [from guile. Norm. Fr. gyleur.] A deceiver; one that betrays into danger by insidious practices.

In the last times there schulen come gilours, wandering after their own desires.

Wicliffe, St. Jude, ver. 19.

Where those two guilers with Malbecco were.

Spenser, F. Q.

But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.

Spenser, F. Q.

GUILLotine.* n. s. [French. Said to be the invention of one Dr. Guillotine, at the early part of the French democratical revolution, viz. in 1792, who himself suffered under the machine.] It was, however, nothing more than a slight improvement on an ancient instrument, formerly used both in Scotland and England, for beheading criminals.] A machine for separating, at one stroke, the head of a person from the body.

A bloody ruffian, who, whilst he is receiving their homage, is measuring them with his eye, and fitting to their size the slider of his guillotine.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

Yes; to my country's justice I appeal,

Nor dread the press, the guillotine, nor wheel.

Pursuits of Literature, P. ii.

To GUILOTINE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To decapitate by the guillotine.

Had you been guillotined by Robespierre.

Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bib. in Lett. to T. Paine, L. 7.

GUILT.† n. s. [Æt., Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.

Dr. Johnson.—Guilt is ze-pizle, guiled, guilt, guilt; the past participle of ze-pighan. And to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been guiled, or, as we now say, beguiled; as wicked means witched, or bewitched. To pronounce guilty is indeed to pronounce wicked. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 324.

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon, Hen. VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Close pent up guils

Rive your concealing continents, and ask

These dreadful summoners grace. Shaks. K. Lear.

GUILT-SICK.* adj. [guilt and sick.] Diseased by guilt.

Then we live indeed,

When we can go to rest without alarm

Given every minute to a guilt-sick conscience

To keep us waking, and rise in the morning

Secure in being innocent.

Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

GUILTILY.† adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:

Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The satire should be like the porcupine,
That shoots sharp quills out in each angry line,
And wounds the blushing cheek, and fiery eye,
Of him that hears, and readeth guiltily.

Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 3.

This leprous soul, that attends guiltily, but yet comfortably, your determination upon it.

Donne, Devot. p. 215.

GUILTINESS. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.

Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny;

O, in the battle think on Buckingham,

And die in terror of thy guiltiness.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaks.

GUILTLESS.† adj. [from guilt.]

1. Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver

The noble duke of Clarence to your hands;

I will not reason what is meant hereby,

Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,

All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare, Othello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

Numb. v. 31.

Thou, who dost all thou wishest at thy will,

And never willst taught but what is right,

Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;

Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,

Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made

On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,

And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryden.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,

When love approach'd me under friendship's name.

Pope.

2. Unpolluted.

Such gardening tools as Art yet rude,

Guiltless of fire, had form'd. Milton, P. L.

This bush of yellow beard, this length of hair,

Which from my birth inviolate I bear,

Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,

Shall fall a plenteous crop, reserv'd for thee.

Dryden, Fab.

3. Having no experience.

Heifers guiltless of the yoke. Pope, Iliad.

GUILTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.GUILTLESSNESS. n. s. [from guiltless.]

Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTY.† adj. [γύλις, Saxon, condemned to pay a fine for an offence. But see the etymology of GUILT.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xlii. 21.

Mark'd you not

How that the guilty kindred of the queen

Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shakespeare.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

Farewell the stones

And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.

Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thoms.

3. Conscious.

I'll give out all he does is dictated from other men, and swear it too, if thou'lt ha'me; and that I know the time and place where he stole it, though my soul be guilty of no such thing.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

When we are not guilty to ourselves. Tillotson.

GUILTY-LIKE.* adv. [guilty and like.]

Guiltily.

Cassio, my lord! No sure I cannot think it, That he would steal away so guilty-like Seeing you coming. Shakespeare, Othello.

GUIMPLE.* See WIMPLE.GUINEA.† n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.

"They [the ships belonging to the African company] brought home such store of gold that administered the first occasion for the coinage of those pieces, which from thence had the denomination of guineas; and what was afterwards made of the same species, was coined of the gold that was brought from that coast by the royal company." Lord Clarendon's Life, vol. ii. p. 376.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind: Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUINEADROPPER. n. s. [guinea and drop.]

One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.

Gay.

GUINEAHEN. n. s. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.GUINEAPEPPER. n. s. [capsicum, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

GU'NEAPIG. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GU'NIAD.* n. s. [Welsh, gwyn, white.] A name for the fish called whiting.

GUISE. n. s. [The same with wise; guise, French; piſa, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own sire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view, Spenser.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant, and beguile the wise.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise;
and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton, P. L.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God aright. Milton, P. L.

Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton, Comus.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wise. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. B. Jonson.
The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GU'ISER.* n. s. [from guise, dress; or from the Teut. guyse, a scoff.] Mummery, who go about at Christmas; persons in disguise. Used in Derbyshire, according to Pegge. See MUMMER.

GUITA'R.* n. s. [from guitarra, Italian; guitare, French; guitarra, Spanish; kitar, Arab; cithara, Lat.; κίθάρα, Gr. whence gittern, and cithern, old English. "The sesta has six strings, and is of the same species with the kitar; whence our guitar, from the Spanish guitarra, seems to have been borrowed; as it was a favourite instrument with the Arabian conquerors of Spain." Richardson on the Languages, &c. of Eastern Nations, ch. 3. sect. 6. The ancient κίθάρα is said to have had four strings; and the Persian ciar, four, and tar, a string, has been mentioned as the etymon of this instrument in that language. See Bp. Chandler's Vindication of the Defence of Christianity, vol. i. p. 51.] A stringed instrument of music.

Salads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prior.
To GULCH.* v. n. [Icel. gule, gula, bucca; gulpa, buccis vorare ductus; Su. Vulg. goelka, avidè deglutiendo devorare. Serenius. Teut. gulsigh, voracious.] To swallow voraciously.
Conveys his burden and the waves
To gulching seas doth cast. Turberville, Mant. Ecl. 2.

GULCH.† } n. s. [from the verb.]
GU'LCHIN. }

1. A glutton. A word of contempt.
Then you'll know us, you'll see us then, you will, gulch, you will. B. Jonson, Poetaster.
Appet. You muddy gulche, dar'st look me in the face? —
Crap. Good Appetitus —
Appet. Peace, you fat bawson. Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

2. The act of devouring.
Then he has me most cruelly upon the hip, and brings me over with a most deadly gulsh.
Echard, Gr. Cont. of the Clergy, Obs. p. 41.

GULES.† adj. [Fr. gueule; generally supposed to be from the Lat. gula, the throat, the colour of which is usually red. The word has been little noticed beyond the jargon of heraldry; though one of our old dramatists introduced guled for made red. Milton also uses "guly dragons" for red dragons, in his first book of Reformation in England. But this again is heraldick language.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakespeare, Timon.
He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble,
When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now is he total gules. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Come, sons of honour,
True virtue's heirs; thus hatch'd with Britain blood,
Let's march to rest, and set in gules like suns. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

GULF.† n. s. [golfe, Fr.; gulff, bas Bret.; golfo, Ital.; κάλυψ, Greek.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser, F. Q.

I know thou'd'st rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare, Coriol.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shaks. Hen. V.
4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shaks. Macb.
GU'LFY.† adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosis.

Whoso had seen them on the gulfy flood,
He would have thought some Delos now againe,
Some towne, some citie, or some desert wood,
Or some new unknowne world from shores of Spaine,

Launch off to seas. Mir. to Mag. p. 816.
Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulfy Dun.

Milton, Vac. Ex.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And 'scap'd the perils of the gulfy main.

Pope, Odyssey.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle
Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile.

Pope, Odyssey.

GU'LIST.* n. s. [from gulo, Latin.] A glutton. An unusual word, as gulosity also is, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into the dictionary.

The gluttonous satiety of our swelling gulist, argues the necessity of their offending by forgetfulness. Featly's Hon. of Chastity, (1632.) p. 12.

To GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Yet love these sorceries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.
He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras.
They are not to be gulled twice with the same trick. L' Etrange.

The Roman people were grossly gulled twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shaks. Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.
Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungente gull, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention play'd on? Shaks. Tw. Night.
His very touching ought that is learned, soils it, and lays him still more and more open, a conspicuous gull. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.
That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

3. A sea-bird; [mergus. Probably from gulo, as the bird is a voracious feeder.]
I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Shakespeare, Timon.

GULLCATCHER. n. s. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher.

GULLER.† n. s. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor.

GULLERY.† n. s. [from gull.] A cheat; imposture.

Leo Decimus, that scoffing pope, took an extraordinary delight in humouring of silly fellows, and to put gulleries upon them.

There hath been not long since, within the compass of these twenty years, a merry gully put upon the world, concerning a guild of men, who style themselves The Brethren of the Rosie Cross.

There never was so gross a gully in the world as this.

Ha, ha! good gully; he does it well! faith.

Gulleries, wherewith poor mortals are befooled and cheated.

GULLET.† n. s. [goulet, Fr.; gula, Lat.] 1. The throat; a passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the œsophagus.

It might be his doom,
One day to sing

With gullet in string.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipe; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without wizzon, as vbrales and cetaceous animals.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet.

2. A small stream or lake. Not now in use.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean.

A deep, unpassable gullet of water, without bridge, ford, or ferry.

GULLIBILITY.* n. s. [from gull.] Credulity; a low expression, sometimes used for cullibility.

GULLIGUT.* n. s. [gulo, Lat. "gulones, gulliguts, belly-gods," Ainsworth; gouil-lart, Fr.] A glutton. A low word.

GULLISH.* adj. [from gull.] Foolish; stupid; absurd.

They have most part some gullish humour or other, by which they are led: one is an epicure, an atheist; a second, a gamester; a third, a whoremaster; fit subjects all for a satirist to work upon.

GULLISHNESS.* n. s. [from gullish.] Foolishness; stupidity.

To the end his prince might never awaken or rouse himself from out his drowsy and shameful lethe-sleep, and, by opening his eyes, come to the knowledge of his own stolidity, idiotism, and gullishness, and so discover others' treacherous ambition, he had filled his court with flatterers.

To GULLY. v. n. [corrupted from gulle.] To run with noise.

GULLY.* n. s. [goulet, Fr.] "a deep gutter of water," Cotgrave; gulle, old Germ.; standing water, a kind of pool.]

1. A sort of ditch.

The violent rain which had fallen in the night had suddenly brought down such torrents of water through the hollow or gully where they had taken up their station, that they were in the utmost danger of being swept away before it.

2. A house-knife, to cut bread. Yorkshire Gloss. 1697. Still used in the north. Grose and Brockett. Of uncertain etymology.

3. The pluck of a calf. Berkshire. Grose. GULLXHOLE. n. s. [from gully and hole.] The hole where the gutters empty themselves in the subterranean sewer.

GULO'SITY. n. s. [gulosus, Lat.] Greediness; gluttony; voracity.

To GULP. v. a. [gulpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain.

GULP. n. s. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep aspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair.

GULPH.* See GULF.

GUM.† n. s. [Sax. goma; Fr. gomme; Ital. gomma; Lat. gummi.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent.

One whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions higher come.

Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire.

2. The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth. [Sax. goma, palatum, gom-teð; German, gum; Dutch, gom.]

They appear to be an abbreviation of the Gr. γομφος, the cheektooth.]

The bape that milks me
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums.

Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes.

To GUM.† v. a. [from the noun. French, gommer.]

1. To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour.

The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter.

GUMMO'SITY. n. s. [from gummos.] The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the elastic fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity.

GUMMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummos or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil.

GUMMY. adj. [from gum.] 1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields.

How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears.

2. Productive of gum.

The clouds
Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame,
driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate.

GUMPTION.* n. s. [Sax. guman, to take care; Icel. gum; Su. Goth. gom, attention. See To GAUM. Hence gumtion, or gumption.] Understanding; skill.

Grose confines this word to the northern dialect; Pegge, to that of Kent. It is common in most counties among the vulgar.

He has no gumption; i. e. he sets about the work awkwardly.

GUN.† n. s. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canna is the original of cannon. Dr. Johnson. Gun, formerly written gon, is the past participle of the Sax. gȳnan, to gape. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 307. Somner derives it from mangon, Fr. a warlike instrument, used before the invention of guns; an engine, out of which stones, iron, and arrows were violently darted; omitting the first syllable. But why not from gyn, an engine, which Robert of Gloucester uses? This indeed is the most probable etymon. "Sometimes," says Selden, "we put a new signification to an old word; as when we call a piece, a gun; [for] the word gun was in use in England for an engine to cast a thing from a man, long before there was any gunpowder found out." Table-Talk, Lang.

§ 4. Walsingham repeatedly uses gunna for cannon. See also GUNSTONE.] The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knolles, Hist.
The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.

Cleaveland.
In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we shun,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'ing gun.
Granville.

To GUN.* v. n. [from the noun.] To perform the act of shooting with a gun.
There is less danger in't than gunning, Sanchio.
Beaumont and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

GUNNARCHY.† See GYNARCHY.

GUNNEL.† n. s. [corrupted from gunwale.] See GUNWALE.

One would think that the ballast of the ship was shifted with us, and that our constitution had the gunnel under water.

Burke, Sp. on the Reform of Representation.
GUNNER.† n. s. [from gun.]

1. Cannoneer; he whose employment is to manage the artillery in a ship.

The nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before him. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
They slew the principal gunners, and carried away their artillery. Hayward.

2. One who shoots; one who uses a gun to kill game.

I had rather
Have anger'd all the gods, than that blind gunner.
Beaumont and Fl. Cypid's Revenge.

GUNNERY. n. s. [from gunner.] The science of artillery; the art of managing cannon.

GUNO'CRACY.* See GYNOCRACY.

GUNPOWDER. n. s. [gun and powder.] The powder put into guns to be fired. It consists of about fifteen parts of nitre, three parts of sulphur, and two of charcoal. The proportions are not exactly kept.

In gurging gulfe of these such surging seas.
Mir. for Mag. p. 227.

GURGEONS.† n. s. pl. The coarser part of the meal, sifted from the bran. See also GRUDGEONS.

Out of this is the coarsest of the bran, usually called gurgeons or pollard, taken.
Harrison, Deser. of Engl. prefixed to Holinshed.

To GURGLE. v. n. [gorgogliare, Italian.] To fall or gush with noise, as water from a bottle.

Then when a fountain's gurgling waters play,
They rush to land, and end in feasts the day. Pope.

Pure gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
And waste their musick on the savage race. Young.

GURKIN.* n. s. [This seems to be the right word; Lat. cucurbita; Dan. agurke. Dr. Johnson gives it gherkin.] A small cucumber for pickling. See GHERKIN.

GURNARD. } n. s. [gournauld, Fr.] A kind
GURNET. } of sea-fish.

If I be not ashamed of my soldiers I am a sow'd' gurnet: I have misus'd the king's press damnably. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To GUSH.† v. n. [German, giessen; Icel. geisa.]

1. To flow or rush out with violence; not to spring in a small stream, but in a large body.

A sea of blood gush'd from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments stain'd with filthy gore. Spenser, F. Q.

The covering of this abyss was broken asunder,
and the water gushed out that made the deluge. Burnet.

Incessant streams of thin magnetick rays
Gush from their fountains with impetuous force,
In either pole, then take an adverse course. Blackmore.

On either hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall. Thomson.

2. To emit in a copious effluxion.
The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood. Dryden.

Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe. Pope.

GUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] An emission of liquor in a large quantity at once; the liquor so emitted.

If a lung-vein be bursted, generally at the first cough a great gush of blood is coughed up. Harvey.

GUSSET.† n. s. [gousset, Fr.] Any piece sewed on cloth in order to strengthen it. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave, two centuries since, defined the word more nearly to its present meaning, "the piece of a shirt, whereby the armhole is covered." It is an angular piece of cloth sewn at the upper end of the sleeve of a shirt or shift.

GUST.† n. s. [goust, French; gustus, Latin.]

1. Sense of tasting.
Would he eat to satisfy and not to invite his hunger, and drink to refresh and not to force and oppress himself; his relish would be quick and vigorous, his gust sincere, and his digestion easy. Scott, Christian Life, iii. 3.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton, P. L.

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and sought with surlly pride. Dryden, Fob.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden, Fob.

3. Love; liking.
Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.
We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

The purer the soil is, the purer will all its faculties and operations be, the less it will retain of corporeal gusts and relishes, the more recollected and undivided will be its powers. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 170.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From gustr, Goth. and Icelandic.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakspeare.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon, Henry VII.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryden.
Pardon a weak distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. Addison, Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for justs, sports, Dr. Johnson says; which is an unjust acutemper'd; for, in the passage which Dr. Johnson has cited, the reading is giusts. See Justr.

To *GUST v. a. [Lat. Gusto.] To taste;
to have a relish of. Cockeram.

'Tis far gone,
When I shall gust it last. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
The palate of this age gusts nothing high.
L'Estrange on Beaumont and Fl. Plays.

GU'STABLE. adj. [gusto, Lat.]

1. To be tasted.

This position informs us of a vulgar error,
terming the gall bitter; whereas there is nothing
gustable sweeter. Harvey.

2. Pleasant to the taste.

A gustable thing, seen or smelt, excites the appetite, and affects the glands and parts of the mouth. Derham.

*GU'STABLE n. s. Any thing that may be tasted; an eatable.

The touch acknowledgeth no gustables,
The taste no fragrant smell.

More, Song of the Soul, ii. ii. 4.

GUSTA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. gustation,
from gusto, Lat.] The act of tasting.

The gullet and conveying parts partake of the nerves of gustation, or appertaining unto sapor.

Brown.

GU'STFUL.† adj. [gust and full.] Tasteful; well-tasted.

A famous composition made of divers cordials — which they throw into water to make it more gustful. Howell, Lett., (Oct. 1634), ii. 54.

What he defaultks from some dry, insipid sin, is but to make up a Benjamin's mess for some other more gustful. Decay of Piety, p. 119.

*GU'STFULNESS n. s. [from gustful.] The relish of any thing.

As no man can well enjoy himself, or find sound content in any thing, while business or duty lie unfinished on his hands, so when he has done his best toward the dispatch of his work, he will then comfortably take his ease and enjoy his pleasure;
then his food doth taste savourily; then his diver-tisements and recreations have a lively gustfulness;
then his sleep is very sound and pleasant.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 19.

*GU'STLESS adj. [gust and less.] Tasteless; insipid.

No gustless or unsatisfying offal.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 13.

GU'STO. n. s. [Italian.]

1. The relish of any thing; the power by which any thing excites sensations in the palate.

Pleasant gustos gratify the appetite of the luxurious. Derham.

2. Intellectual taste; liking.

In reading what I have invented, let them bring no particular gusto along with them. Dryden.

GU'STY.† adj. [from gust.] Stormy; tempestuous.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

They are as a gusty wind and sail to a ship; if she steer right, they prosper and further her course;
but if wrong, they serve only to strike her against the rocks with more speed and force.

Norris, on the Beatitudes, p. 123.

It is still a gusty kind of weather; there is a kind of sickness in the air.

Dryden, Ded. Hist. of the League.
Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind.
Thomson, Summer.

GUT.† n. s. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below,
close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acid or poisonous substance taken inwardly.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food;
proverbially.

And cramm'd them till their guts did ake,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudibras.
With false weights their servants' guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit.

Dryden, Juv.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou didst on thy guts bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank'st.

Hakewill on Providence.

4. A passage.

Here we entered into a narrow gut between two steep rocky mountains. Maundrell, Trav. p. 134.

To GUT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.
The fishermen save the most part of their fish;
some are gutted, split, powdered and dried.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a gull, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces.

Dryden.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

*GUTTA SERENA n. s. [Latin.] A disease of the eye. See DROP SERENE.

He hath his eyes open, but sees no otherwise than if a gutta serena, or heated steel, had deprived the optic. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

We know a total obstruction of the optic nerve, which is called gutta serena, makes as perfect a blindness, as an obstruction of the humour aquous, which is called a cataract. Smith on Old Age, p. 98.

GUTTATED. adj. [from gutta, Lat. a drop.]
Besprinkled with drops; bedropped.

Dict.

GUTTER.† n. s. [from guttur, a throat,
Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the
Fr. gouttiere; Norm. Fr. gutter; but the word may be traced to the Su. Goth.
guta, to pour forth, to flow. Junius refers gutter to the Cimbr. gautur, a flow of water.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Mozon.

Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain. Addison on Italy.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GUTTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by
The divine Desdemona. Shakspeare, Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears.

Sandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd,
Dryden.

To *GU'TTER v. n. To fall in drops; to run as a candle. Scott.

To GU'TTLE. v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandize. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence.

Dryden.

To GU'TTLE. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow. A low word.

The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER. n. s. [from guttile.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.]
In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GU'TTURAL.† adj. [guttural, French; gutturális, Latin.] Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spiritaly, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Holder.

Children are occasionally born with guttural swellings. Guthrie, Geog. Switzerland.

GU'TTURALNESS. n. s. [from guttural.]

The quality of being guttural. Dict.

GU'TWORT. n. s. [gut and wort.] An herb.

GUY. n. s. [from guide.] A rope used to lift any thing into the ship. Skinner.

To GU'ZZLE.† v. n. [from gut or gust, to guttle or gustle. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Italian, gozzavigliare, "to make good cheer, to take delight in gluttony and riot." Florio, World of Words, 1598.] To gormandize; to feed immoderately; to swallow any liquor greedily.

Well season'd bowls the gossip's spirits raise,
Who while she guzzles chats the doctor's praise.

Roscommon.

They fell to lapping and guzzling, till they burst themselves. L'Estrange.

No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey. Gay.

To GU'ZZLE. v. a. To swallow with immoderate gust.

The Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing,
Still guzzling most of wine. Dryden.

*GU'ZZLE n. s. An insatiable thing or person.

That senseless, sensual epicure,
That sink of filth, that guzzle most impure.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. ii. 7.

GUZZLER. n. s. [from guzzle.] A gourmandizer; an immoderate eater or drinker.

GYBE. n. s. [See GIBE.] A sneer; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, saucy, and as quarrelous as the weazle. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

TO GYBE. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear, And common courtiers love to gybe and flear.

Spenser.

TO GYE.* v. a. To guide. Chaucer. See To GIE.

GYMNASIUM.* n. s. [Latin; Greek, γυμνάσιον, from γυμνός, naked.] Formerly a place for athletic exercises, in which such as practised them were nearly naked; any place of exercise; a school.

In our universities, Cambridge and Oxford; — where the worst college is more sight-worthy than the best Dutch gymnasium.

Fuller, Holy State, (1648.) p. 149.

Italy is the sole gymnasium and library of their knowledge and learning.

Ricaut, State of the Gr. Church, p. 333.

The word gymnasium does properly signify the place where people exercise themselves when stripped.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

GYMNASIALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.] Athletically; fitly for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour are not gymnastically composed, nor actively use those parts.

GYMNAS'TICK.* adj. [γυμναστικός; gymnastique, French.] Pertaining to athletic exercises; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, throwing the dart or quoit.

Jamblichus, speaking of the powers which flow from the gods among those which co-operate with nature, mentions only the medicinal and gymnastick as the two principal. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

GYMNAS'TICK.* n. s.

1. Athletic exercise. The Cretans wisely forbid their servants gymnastics as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. A teacher of the wrestling science.

Cockeram.

GYMNICAL. adj. [γυμνικός, Gr.] Pertaining to athletic exercises. Gymnical exercises at Pitana.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. ch. 20.

GYMNIC. adj. [γυμνικός; gymnique, Fr.] Applied to such as practise the athletic or gymnastick exercises.

Have they not sword-players, and every sort of gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners.

Milton, S. A.

GYMNICK.* n. s. Athletic exercise.

Theatres and spacious fields allotted for all gymnicks, sports, and honest recreations.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GYMNOSOPHIST.* n. s. [Fr. gymnosophe; Latin, gymnosophista; Greek, γυμνοσοφιστής, from γυμνός, naked, and σοφός, wise; so called, because these philosophers went nearly naked.] One of a sect of Indian philosophers; a name, said to be given by the Greeks to the bramins. But there were African as well as Asiatic gymnosophists. The word is also used for any philosopher.

How know you what may be shewed for the gymnosophists' prayers in India?

Beware of M. Jewel, (1566.) fol. 38. b.

Those seven wise men of Greece, those Britain druids, Indian, brachmanni, Æthiopian gymnosophists, magi of the Persians.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Thus have most civilities and sciences come, as some think, from the Indian gymnosophists, into Egypt; from thence into Greece; so into Italy; and then over the Alps, into these faint north-west parts of the world.

Blount, Voyage into the Levant, (1650.) p. 154.

Let us straight advance in quest

Of this profound gymnosophist. Hudibras, ii. iii.

GYMNOSPE'RMIOUS. adj. [γυμνός and σπερμα.] Having the seeds naked.

TO GYN.* v. n. To begin. Wicliffe. See To GIN.

GY'NARCHY.* n. s. [Gr. γυνή, a woman, and ἀρχή, government.] Female government; written, not so properly, gunarchy; as some other compounds of this kind are with u instead of y. See GYNEOCRACY.

I have always some hopes of change under a gynarchy.

Ld. Chesterfield.

GYNE'CIAN.* adj. [γυναικός, genitive of the Gr. γυνή, a woman.] Relating to women.

Modern physicians prescribe fasting and abstinence to all melancholy lovers: as likewise do all gynecian writers to women.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. (1640.) p. 331.

GYNEO'CRACY.* n. s. [old Fr. gynocratie; Gr. γυνή, a woman, and κράτος, power.] Government over which a woman may preside. Properly written by our old authors gynaecocracy; less so by modern, gynocracy.

Becanus undertakes a conjecture of the first cause which excluded gynaecocracy among them [the French]. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 18.

The French exclude gynocracy, or the government in chief by women. Biographiana, p. 76.

GYNECO'CRACY. n. s. [γυναικοκρατία; gynecocratie, French.] Petticoat government; female power.

GYPSE. n. s. [Fr. gypse. See GYP SUM.] A kind of stone.

The soil of Cyprus is for the most part rocky: there are in it many entire hills of talc or gypse. Pococke, Descript. of the East, ii. 229.

GY'PSEOUS.* } adj. Relating to gypsum;
GYPSINE. } belonging to lime or plaster.

Gloss. Ang. 1707.

We meet with a rhomboidal gypseous stone, called also selénites. Chambers, in V. Gypsum. Gyp sine stone [is] a name given by some writers to the gypsum, or fossil substance, of which the powder, called plaster of Paris, is made by calcination. Chambers.

GYP'SUM.* n. s. [Latin; Greek, γύψος, from γῆ, earth, and ψάω, to conçoit.] A compound of calcareous earth and vitriolick acid: it forms a distinct species of the calcareous genus of fossils; of which species there are six families. Kirwan. When heated red hot, it falls into powder, which, when mixed with water, is called Plaster of Paris. See also GYPSEOUS.

Gypsum is found in very large quantities in many parts of the globe, forming extensive chains of mountains and hills, as in the neighbourhood of Paris. Chambers.

Gypsum — this manure was discovered by Mr. Mayer, a German clergyman of uncommon merit, in the year 1768: it has since been applied with signal success in Germany, Switzerland, France, and America. Kirwan on Manures, p. 93.

GY'PSY.* See GIPSY.

GYRA'TION. n. s. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvia attenuated and impelleth the neighbour air, which returning home, in a gyration, carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electric. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newton.

GYRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward, Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre, Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard, But rudely rag'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky, And to the South by thy direction fly?

Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll

In restless gyres about the Arctick pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres, Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires.

Dryden.

TO GYRE. v. a. [Latin, gyro.] To turn round.

With the spiteful Philistim, he [the devil] puts out both the eyes of our apprehension and judgement, that he may gyre us about in the mill of unprofitable wickedness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 25.

GY'RED.† adj. Falling in rings, Dr. Johnson says; citing a passage from Shakspeare's Hamlet, in which the word is gyved. See DOWNGYVED.

GYRFA'LCON.* See GERFALCON.

GY'ROMANCY.* n. s. [old Fr. gyromantie; from the Gr. γῶρος, a circle, and μαντία, divination.] An ancient sort of divination, performed by walking in or round a circle.

GYVE.† n. s. [gevyon, Welsh. Dr. Johnson confines this word to the plural number; yet it certainly exists, in our language, in the singular.] A fetter; a chain for the legs. It is commonly used in the plural.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakspeare.

And knowing this, should I yet stay, Like such as blow away their lives, And never will redeem a day, Enamour'd of their golden gyves? B. Jonson.

A golden give, a pleasing wrong.

Beaumont and FL. Wife for a Month.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves.

Knolles.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton, S. A.

A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,

His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd.

TO GYVE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

All in irons was my songe, Even now I satte gyved in a payre of stocks.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship.

Shakspeare, Othello.

H A B

H† Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought. Dr. Johnson. — The strong emission of the breath, however, is usually withheld from heir, herb, hostler, honest, honour, humour; and perhaps from hospital and hour; and by some from humble.

HA, interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see,

Shakspeare.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets, ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off.

Job, xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;

Our plots and delusions

Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crowd. Dryden.

HA* n. s. [from the interjection.] An expression of wonder, surprise, doubt, or hesitation. See the fourth sense of HUM.

Praise her but for this her without-door form,
(Which, on my faith, deserves high speech,) and straight

The shrug, the hum, or ha; these petty brands,
That calumny doth use: — O, I am out,

That mercy dooms; for calumny will fear Virtue itself: — these shrugs, these hums, and ha's,

When you have said she's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she's honest.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

You may be any thing, and leave off to make
Long-winded exercises; or suck up

Your ha, and hum, in a tune. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

My solemn hums and ha's the servants quake at. Beaumont and Fl. Low. Progress.

To HA* v. n. To express surprise; to hesitate. See To HAW.

HAAK† n. s. A fish. Another name for the hake. Written haak by Barret and others. See HAKE.

HA BEAS CORPUS† [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowel.

There is no habeas corpus from death.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 250.

The very intention of our habeas corpus act, namely, the preservation of the liberties of the subject, absolutely requires that act now to be suspended. Addison, Freehold. No. 16.

HA'BERDASHER† n. s. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minshew from habt ihr dass, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner, who is followed by Junius, offers the Dutch koop, to buy, and daes, foolish, q. d. koop daes, a seller of trifles. Pegge suggests fevre d'acier, a needle-maker. But the word belongs to none of these. Berdash is said to have been a name formerly used in England for a certain kind of neck-dress; whence the maker or seller of such clothes was called a berdasher; and thence came haberdashers. See Chambers in V. BERDASH.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HA'BERDASHERY* n. s. [from haberdasher.] Articles made or sold by haberdashers.

You will hardly expect me to go through the tape and thread, and all the other small wares of haberdashery and millinery to be gleaned up among our imports. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

HA'BERDINE† n. s. [French, habordean.] A dried salt cod.

Ainsworth.

HA'BERGEON† n. s. [Fr. haubergeon, from hauberg; low Lat. haubergetum, haubergium, halsberga. Du Cange and Skinner derive the word from the Teut. hultz, or hals, the neck, and bergen, to cover; others, from al, all, and bergen, to cover. Spelman considers it as the old Fr. hault, high, and berg, covering. Some French etymologists pretend that it comes from haut-ber, a high or distinguished person, one who serves his prince in complete armour. V. Roquefort in V. HAUBER. But it is, no doubt, from hals and bergen, as already stated. Goth. halsbiorg, a steel collar; Icel. halsbiorg, the same.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breast-plate; neck-piece; gorget; originally, a coat of mail without sleeves.

It shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an haubergeon, that it be not rent. Erod. xxviii. 32.

And halbert some, and some a habergion; So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.

The shot let fly, and grazing

Upon his shoulder, in the passing,

Lodg'd in Magnano's brass haubergeon. Hudibras.

HA'BILE* adj. [habilis, Lat. habile, Fr.] Qualified; fit for. Not now in use. See ABLE and HABLE.

God imprinted on her the fairest impress of his most amiable image, and rendered her habile and ready to every good work.

Dr. Walker's Life of Lady Warwick, (1678), p. 119.

HAB'LIMENT. n. s. [habilement, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,

Strange lady, in so strange habilement,
Teaching the Satyrs. Spenser, F. Q.

My riches are these poor habilements,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

Shakspeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habilements of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABILITATE. v. a. [habilit, Fr.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

HAB'LITATE. adj. [habilit, Fr.] Qualified; entitled.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attained, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament; being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITATION. n. s. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon, Ess. 29.

HAB'LITY† n. s. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power; means: now ability.

Aladine, though meaner born,

And of less livelood and hability. Spenser, F. Q.

Of promptness, and of industry,

Hability, reality. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

HABIT† n. s. [habit, old French; habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted

Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit

Met I my father. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;

If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shaks.

Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgement may be made betwixt them. Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same

We wore last year. Dryden.

Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequently doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakespeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infiction. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose, But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HAB'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess
Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes

The partner of your bed. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustic dances. Dryden.

To *HAB'IT v. a. [habito, Latin.] To inhabit; to dwell in. Not now in use.

Nightingales —
That in their sweet songs deliten,
In thilke places as they habiten.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 660.

HAB'ITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitable, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
This is her habitable tropique clime. Donne.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
Look round the habitable world, how few
Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue. Dryden.

HAB'ITABLENESS. n. s. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. More.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

*HAB'ITACLE n. s. [old Fr. habitable; Lat. habitaculum. One of our oldest words, being used by Wicliffe and Chaucer; and repeatedly in our old lexicography. The Scotch also use habitable.] A dwelling.

He shall finally suppe with me and with him in the eternal habitable of God.

Bale on the Revel. (1550), P. I.

HAB'ITANCE. n. s. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desert hast thine habitan?
And these rich heaps of wealth do'st hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right useance. Spenser, F. Q.

HAB'ITANT. n. s. [habitant, Fr. habitants, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milton, P. L.

Powers celestial to each other's view
Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITA'TION. n. s. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and ev'ry star perhaps a world
Of destin'd habitation. Milton, P. L.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces,
For want of habitation and repair,
Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterioration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men
Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings. Milton, P. L.

HAB'ITATOR. n. s. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern habitants; and the longest day in Cancer, is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

*HAB'ITED adj. [from habit.] Accustomed; usual.

This ancient and habited vice is amongst the Dutch, of late years, much decreased. Fuller, Holy State, p. 437.

HAB'ITUAL. adj. [habitu, from habit, Fr.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in power before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton, P. L.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HAB'ITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify
our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HAB'ITUATE. v. a. [habiteur, French.] To accustom: to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habitate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.
Such as live in a rarer air are *habitu*ated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot.

*HAB'ITUATE adj. [from the verb.] Inveterate; obstinate.

All earthly vanities, which any *habitu*ate sinner desires. Hammond, Works, iv. 679.

HAB'ITUDE. n. s. [habitud, Lat. habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a streight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South, Serm.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life
The friend, the mistress, and the wife;
Variety we still pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes
with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse;
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

*HAB'LE adj. [hable, old Fr. habile, bas Bret. as our own word was formerly written; habilis, Lat.] Fit; proper. See ABLE.

As hagar'd hawke, presuming to contend
With hardy fowle above his hable might. Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 19.

HAB'NAB† adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would nould, or ne would; will nill, or ne will, that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

Philautus determined, habnab, to send his letters.
Lilly, Euphras, &c. p. 109.

As they came in by habnab, so will I bring them in a reckoning at six and at sevens. Haywood, Fair Maid of the West, (1631)

He circles draws and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters;
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random. Hudibras.

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, Fr. from acare, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Richard the second here was hack'd to death.

Shakespeare.

I'll fight till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Shakespeare.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shaks.
Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.
Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But purple vests and flow'ry garlands please.

Addison.

But fate with butchers plac'd their priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl.

Pope.

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation.

Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Shakespeare.

HACK.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A notch; a hollow cut.

Look you, what hacks are on his helmet.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

2. Hesitating or faltering speech. [from the verb.]

He speaks to this very question with so many hacks and hesitations.

More, Myst. of Godd. (1660), p. 270.

3. A pick-axe; a mattock with one end, and that a broad one. [haaka, Icel. cædo.] Grose, and Craven Dialect.

HACK.* n. s. [old French, haque, a gelding; haquet, a little horse; perhaps from the Lat. equus.] A horse let out for hire. The usage of the present word is apparently modern in our language.

I am almost suffocated with dust every summer, occasioned by those crowds of prentice-boys, who are whipping their hired hacks to death.

Moore.

HACK.* adj. Hired. A low expression.

Hack preachers employed in the service of defaulter and absentees.

Wakefield, Mem.

To HACK.† v. n. [from the noun.] To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute.

Hanmer.

To HA'CKLE.† v. a. [Teut. hekelen, from hacke, a hook; hake, Su. Goth. the same.]

1. To dress flax.

2. To separate; to tear asunder.

Other divisions of the kingdom being hacked and torn to pieces, and separated from all their habitual means.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

HA'CKLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A comb for dressing flax.

Some layd to pledge

Their hatchet and their wedge,

Their hekkell, and their rele,

Their rock, their spinning whele.

Skelton, Poems, p. 132.

HA'CKLE.† n. s. Raw silk; any filthy substance unspun. Dr. Johnson says. It is, in fact, merely a fly for angling, dressed sometimes with the feathers of a cock, and sometimes with silk. So called, Dr. Jamieson thinks, from its resemblance to a comb for dressing flax.

Hackles are a very important article in fly-making; they are the long slender feathers that hang from the head of a cock down his neck.

Walton, Angler, ch. 5.

We have also a hackle with a purple body, whipt about with a red capon's feather; as also a gold-twist hackle.

Cotton, Angler, ch. 8.

HA'CKNEY.† n. s. [hacknai, Welsh; hackeneay, Teuton; haquenée, French;

perhaps from haque, old Fr. a gelding; Lat. equus. See HACK. Serenius, however, notices the Cim. hacknay, equus rotularius. In several instances Dr. Johnson has given examples of this word, where it is not a substantive but an adjective; though, as an adjective, he has not noticed it.]

1. A pacing horse; a pad; a nag.

His hackney — was all pomelee gris,

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Prol.

He asked, whither with that horse I wolde gon; And then I told hym, it was myne own; He said, I had stolen hym; and I sayd, naye: This is, sayd he, my brother's hacknaye.

Old Morality of Hycke Scorne.

The fatness of the earth doth put in good liking the servicable steede and the miller's hackney.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 12.

Image now to yourself this illustrious cavalier mounted on his hackney.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 47.

2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire.

Bacon.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag

And hackney of a Lapland hag,

In quest of you came hither post.

Hudibras.

3. A hiring; a prostitute.

I labour,

I moil and toil for ye: I am your hackney.

Beaumont and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

She was so notoriously lewd, that she was called an hackney. Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. i. Append.

Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,

Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend

To break my windows.

Pope.

4. Any thing let out for hire. See the third sense of the adjective.

HA'CKNEY.* adj.

1. Worn out, like a hired horse.

Law, like a horse-courser;

Her rules and precepts hung with gawds and ribbands,

And pamper'd up to cozen him that bought her,
When she herself was hackney, lame, and founder'd.

Beaumont and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

2. Prostitute; vicious for hire.

Three kingdoms rung

With his accumulative and hackney tongue.

Roscommon.

That is no more than every lewer

Does from his hackney lady suffer.

Hudibras.

3. Much used; common; let out for hire.

The sweat of learned Jonson's brain,

Or gentle Shakespeare's easier strain,

A hackney coach conveys you to,

In spite of all that rain can do;

And for your eighteen pence you sit

The lord and judge of all fresh wit.

Sir J. Suckling.

Slightly trained up in a kind of hypocritical and hackney course of literature.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors.

Harvey.

A wit can study in the streets —

Not quite so well, however, as one ought;

A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought.

Pope, Imit. of Hor.

HA'CKNEY-COACHMAN.* n. s. The driver of a hired or hackney coach.

The hackney-coachmen, chairmen, and porters, are the lovers of the hawkier women, fruitresses, and milkmaids.

Guardian, No. 87.

HA'CKNEY-MAN.* n. s. One who lets horses to hire. Barret, and Sherwood.

By this reckoning, a hackneyman Should have ten shillings for horsing a gentleman,

Where he hath but ten pence of a beggar.

Trag. of Solomon and Perseda, (1599.)

To HA'CKNEY.† v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men.

Shakespeare.

2. To carry in a hackney coach.

To her, who, frugal only that her thrift

May feel, excesses she can ill afford,

Is hackney'd home unlacquey'd. Cowp. Task, B. 2.

HA'QUETON.† n. s. [haquet, old French, a little horse. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson is mistaken both in his etymology, and in his definition, of this word; which he calls, "some piece of armour." It has nothing to do with the horse, and it is not a piece of armour. It is the French haqueton, or hoqueton; Germ. hockete; from the Teut. huyk, a kind of cloak.] A stuffed jacket, formerly worn under armour; sometimes made of leather. The Black Prince's haqueton, composed of quilted cotton, is suspended over his tomb in Canterbury cathedral.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his haqueton, and his habergeon.

Spenser, on Ireland.

But th' other did upon his truncheon smyte;

Which hewing quite asunder, further way

It made, and on his haqueton did lyte,

The which dividing with importune sway

It seized in his right side, and there the dint did stay.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 38.

HA'CKSTER.* n. s. [from hack.] A bully; a ruffian; an assassin.

If some such desperate hackster shall decide

To rouse thine hare's-heart from her cowardice.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

Elfrith, second wife to king Edgar, having contrived the death of Edward her son-in-law, murdered him by a company of hacksters and villains, at her appointment at Corfe Castle.

Fuller, Ch. Hist. p. 265.

Happy times, when braves and hacksters, the only contented members of his government, were thought the fittest and the faithfullest to defend his person!

Milton, Eiconocl. iii.

HAD. The preterite and part. pass. of have. I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively; nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid,

Than a great queen with this condition. Shaks.

To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison, Cato.

HAD-I-WIST.* A proverbial expression, implying vain afterthoughts: Oh! that I had known.

And is aware of had I wist.

Gower, Conf. Ann. B. 2.

This blindness is not of the eyes alone,

But of the mind a dimness and a mist:

For when they shift to sit in haughty throne

With hope to rule the scepter as they list,

There's no regard nor fear of had-I-wist.

Mir. for Mag. p. 160.

Beware of had I wist.

Camden, Rem.

HA'DDER.* n. s. [German, heide. See HEATH.] Heath; ling.

They lay upon the ground covered with skins,
as the redshanks do on hadder.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 550.

HA'DDOCK. n. s. [hadot, Fr.] A sea-fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and *haddock*s.

Carew.

HADE.* n. s. Among miners, the steep descent of a shaft. In our old language, the descent of a hill.

On the lower leas, as on the higher hades,
The dainty clover grows. Drayton, Polioib. S. 13.

TO HAFLE.* v. n. [Teut. hackelen.] To speak unintelligibly; to waver. Craven
Dial. and Brockett. To prevaricate.
Grose. A northern word.

HAFT.† n. s. [haeft, Saxon; heft, Dutch;
haft, Gothick; from To have or hold.]
A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

But yet ne fond I nought the haft,
Which might unto the blade accorde.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. A.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast.

Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft
or handle is made of materials different from the blade.

Watts, Logic.

TO HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft.

Ainsworth.

HAFTER.* n. s. A wrangler; a caviller.
Barret's Alv. 1580. Serenius renders this old word, in his Swedish dictionary, a crafty or cunning fellow, 1757. It is not now in use.

HAG.† n. s. [hægete, Sax. a goblin; heckle, Dutch, a witch; hexe, German;
formerly haegse, meaning a wise woman,
from the Runic hyggia, wisdom, knowledge. V. Keyser, Antiq. Sept. p. 149.
Our word at first was heg. V. Huloet and Barret.]

1. A witch; an enchantress.

The very dregs of miracles, in milkpans and greasy dishes, by Robingoodfellow, and hags, and fayries, all wrought somewhat for their idle superstitions.

Dering on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576,) ch. 2.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you polecat, you runnion.

Shakespeare.

2. A fury; a she monster.

Thus spoke th'impatient prince, and made a pause;
His foul hags raised their heads, and clapt their
hands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause, Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands.

Crashaw.

3. An old ugly woman.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags,
With hoary locks all loose, and visage grim.

Spenser, F. Q.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou, old hag, of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee! Dryd.

4. Appearances of light and fire upon the manes of horses, or men's hair, were formerly called hags. They are now known to be electrical phenomena.

Hags are said to be made of sweat or some other vapour issuing out of the head; a not unusual sight among us when we ride by night in summer time.

Blount, Glossog.

HAG-BORN.* adj. [hag and born.] Born of a witch or hag.

The son which she did litter here,

A freckled whelp, hag-born. Shakespeare, Tempest.

TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And hag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras.

How are superstitious men *hagg*ed out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions!

L'Estrange.

TO HAG.* v. a. To cut down. Craven

Dialect. A corruption of hack.

HA'GABAG.* See HUCKABACK.

HA'GGARD.† adj. [hagard, Fr. wild;
and accordingly some derive it from the
Lat. agrestis: others, from the Germ.
hag, an inclosure, a fortified place;
whence, according to M. Huet, a hag- gard was applied to a person proud and confident, on account of the strength of the place in which he was.]

1. Wild; untamed; difficult to be reclaimed.

As hagard hawk, presuming to contend

With hardy fowl, above his hable might,

His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,

To truss the prey too heavy for his flight.

Spencer, F. Q.

She's too disdainful;

I know her spirits are as coy and wild,

As hagard as the rock.

Shakespeare.

Virtue sitteth over the names of her servants,
hoverseth over them with her wings, and guards them from the kites and buzzards of this hagard age.

Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. p. 78.

In time, all hagard hawks will stop to lure.

Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

2. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Pearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,

His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast.

Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,

Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,

Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd!

Smith.

HA'GGARD. n. s.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,

Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me

As I have lov'd this proud disdainful hagard.

Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild hagard tow'r into the sky,

And to the South by thy direction fly? Sandys.

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aeries, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the hagard.

Walton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,

In a dark grot, the baleful hagard lay,

Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day.

Garth.

HA'GGARD.* n. s. [Sax. haga and geap;
Su. Goth. hage, a small piece of ground adjoining to a house. See the third sense of Haw. Dr. Jamieson notices haggart, which he understood to be used in some parts of Scotland, but of which he gives no example; and he considers it as imported from Ireland, where it is in common use. It was in the English language, I may add, nearly two centuries since.] A stack-yard.

When the barn was full, any one might thrash
in the haggard. Howell, Lett. ii. 24. (dat. 1632.)

The remainder of the powder was committed to a vault in the haggard under the corn-stand.

Bp. of Killala's Narrative, p. 49.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] De-formedly; uglyly.

For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum; }
And precious oils from distant Indies come; }
How haggardly soe'er she looks at home.

Dryden, Juv.

HA'GGED.* adj. [from hag; or from the German hager.] Lean; ugly; like a hag. Dr. Johnson has placed the following example under haggard, and says that *hagg*ed should have been written haggard. But a passage in Gray's poetry, with a note by Mason, distinguishes the words, as one of those gentlemen who have made additions to Johnson has observed; and therefore I have now introduced into the dictionary this adjective.

A *hagg*ed carrion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon his back, fell into company together.

The ghostly prudes with *hagg*ed face

Already had condemn'd the sinner.

Gray's Long Story.

HA'GGESE.† n. s. [from hog or hack. Dr.
Johnson. — No doubt from hack, that is,
to chop; which in Scotland is hag; Su.
Goth. hugga.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from hag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on,

And wore us out of act.

Shakespeare.

TO HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hack.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er

Comes to him where in gore he lay insteep'd.

Shakespeare.

TO HA'GGLE.† v. n. [harceler, French, bar-guigner. Cotgrave. "To haggle, hucke, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity." To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

Phoo! how she stands, biting her nails,

As if she play'd for half her vails,

Sorting her cards, haggling, and picking!

Shenstone.

I never could drive a hard bargain in my life, concerning any matter whatever; and least of all do I know how to haggle and huckster with merit.

Durke.

HA'GGLER.† n. s. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.

2. One that is tardy in bargaining; a paltering haggler." [gagueraffe.]

Cotgrave.

HAGHES, or HAGUES.* n. s. pl. [Teut.
haegh.] Haws. Grose, and Craven
Dial. A northern word.

HAGIOGRAPH.* n. s. pl. [Latin;
from ἅγιος, holy, and γράφω, to write, Gr.]
Holy writings; a name given to part of the books of Scripture. See HAGIO-GRAPHAL.

Eight [of the translators of the Bible,] assembled at Cambridge, were to finish the rest of the historical books, and the *hagiograph*a.

Abp. Newcome, On the Transl. of the Bib. p. 49.

HAGIO'GRAPHAL.* adj. [from hagio-grapha.] Denoting the writings called hagiographa.

Sirabus—writing upon St. Jerome's prologues, there placed before the Old Testament, wherein, according to the copies then in use, the book of Tobit is said to be separated from the Divine Scriptures and numbered among the hagiographa; he findeth fault with the transcribers, and saith, that Tobit is to be set among the apocryphal books, and not among the hagiographa, properly so called; whereof there be but nine, the whole number of the canonical books being no more than XXII in all.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, p. 152.

HAGIO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [ἁγιος and γράφω.] A holy writer. The Jews divide the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

They were hagiographers, who are supposed to be left to the use of their own words.

Whitby, Gen. Pref. N. Test.

HA'GSHIP.* n. s. [from hag.] The title of a witch or hag; the state of a hag.

What's this? oh, 'tis the charm her hagship gave me.

Middleton's Witch.

HA'INOUS.* See HEINOUS.

HAIR. n. s. [hæp, Sax.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,

These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin, Will quicken and accuse thee. Shaks. K. Lear.

Much is breeding;

Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more

Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn

But in the estimation of a hair,

Thou diest.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He judges to a hair of millions of inches, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.

Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written harebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

HA'LIDOM.† n. s. [haliz hom, holy judgement, or haliz, and dame, for lady. Dr.

Johnson. — Dr. Johnson accordingly gives the example from Spenser, with the definition of the word as meaning "our blessed lady," and with a remark that it should be halidam. But halidom appears to have been an ancient oath or solemn affirmation, "par le sacrement," as Sherwood observes; "forme de jurement ancienne." The Sax. haliz some denoted holiness, devoutness, integrity, as well as a sacrament or any thing holy. Holidame, or halidam, as Dr. Johnson would have it for the holy virgin, is a corruption of the original word: but Spenser is not guilty of it.] An adjuration by what is holy.

By my halidome, quoth he, Ye a great master are in your degree.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

The halliards of the fore-sail. Sherwood.

VOL. II.

HALLO'O.† interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from à lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw. Dr. Johnson.—It is much more probably from the Sax. ahlopan, to bellow, to make a great noise; whence loud, and to low; Germ. hullen. Yet I remember somewhere to have seen à loup, to the wolf! proposed as the origin; and Cotgrave gives us harlow, which he explains by "harreloup, a word wherewith dogs, that hunt or assail a wolf, are cheered and encouraged." See, however, ALEW. The interjection has the accent always on the last syllable; the verb indifferently on either.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,

More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out.

Dryden.

To HA'LLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tunable

Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn.

Shakespeare.

2. To treat as in contempt.

Country folks hallooted and houted after me, as the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy.

Sidney.

To HA'LLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though good and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again.

Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Martius,

Halloo me like a hare. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him, Halloo the other. Shaks. K. Lear.

HA'LLOOING.* n. s. [from halloo.] A loud and vehement cry.

There are noises, huntings, shoutings, halloodings,
Amidst the brakes and furies.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To HALLOW. v. a. [halgian, haliz, Sax. holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of public resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn.

Hooker.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.

Shakespeare.

My prayers

Are not words duly halloo'd, nor my wishes

More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes

Are all I can return. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

God from work

Now resting, bless'd and halloo'd the seventh day,

As resting on that day from all his works,

But not in silence holy kept. Milton, P. L.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,

And vestal fires in halloo'd temples burn. Dryden.

No satyr lurks within this halloo'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound.

Granville.

2. To reverence as holy; halloved be thy name.

HA'LLOWMAS.† n. s. [Sax. haliz and mass.] The feast of All-souls: one of the cross quarters of the year, computing from the first of November to Candlemas.

She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

To speak puling like a beggar at hallowmas.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Ver.

To HALLU'CINATE.* v. n. [Lat. hallucinatus.] To stumble; to blunder.

Cockeram.

HALLUCINATION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Lat.]

Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but unquestionably a mere hallucination of the vulgar.

Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T.

Addison.

HALM. n. s. [healm, Saxon.] Straw: pronounced haum: which see.

HA'LO.† n. s. [Fr. halo, from the Greek ἄλως, a circle.] A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured.

Newton.

I saw by reflection, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halos, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentric to his body.

Newton.

HA'LOW, or HE'LOW.* adj. [Sax. hpyl, bashful.] Shy; awkward, bashful. A northern word. Grose, and Wilbraham's Cheshire Gloss.

HALSE.* n. s. [Sax. halp.] The neck; the throat; one of our oldest words, and yet retained in the north of England, where it is pronounced hause. Halse is likewise in our old lexicography.

Thy litel children hanging by the hals,

For thy Jason, that was of love so fairs.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Pro.

To HALSE.* v. a. [German, halsen; Su. Goth. halsas; to embrace: from halp, the neck.]

1. To embrace about the neck, as children do their parents.

Huloet.

Each other kissed glad,

And lovely hault, from feare of treason free,

And plighted hands, for ever friends to be.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 49.

2. To adjure. [Sax. haljan. Mr. Tyr-whitt has mistaken the sense in the following passage, where he rejects the obvious Saxon meaning, and indeed condescends not to notice it, conceiving the word as denoting to salute with reverence. But that is another sense.]

This yonge child to conjure he began,

And said; O dere child, I halse thee

In vertue of the holy Trinitee,

Tell me what is thy cause for to sing,

Sith that thy throte is cut to my seming.

Chaucer, Priores's Tale.

3. To greet; to salute with respect or reverence. [Germ. heilizan, from heil; Sax. hal; Goth. hails. See the interjection HAIL.]

The eleven sterres halsed him all.

Vis. of P. Ploughman, (1550.) fol. xxxix.

I halse hym hendlicke, as I hys frende were.

Vis. of P. Ploughman, fol. xxii.

- HA'LSENING.* adj. [Sax. half, the throat.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This ill halsening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many.

Carew.

- HAL'SER. n. s. [from half, neck, and seel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow base

They hoisted, and with well-wreathed halsers boise
Their white sails. Chapman.

No halsers need to bind these vessels here,

Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear.

Dryden.

- To HALT.* v. n. [healt, Sax. lame; healtan, to limp; halts, Goth. haltr, Icel. lame, from hallda, to keep back, to detain. Serenius. In like manner, Mr. H. Tooke says that halt is the imperative of the Sax. verb healban, to hold. Div. Purl. ii. 477. The Germ. halten, and Dan. halter, are also to stop.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will she yet debase her eyes

On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus?

Shakespeare.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,

Or wars of exile'd heirs, or foreign rage,

Till halting vengeance overtook our age. Dryd.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,

And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march.

Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.

How long halt ye between two opinions?

1 Kings, xviii. 21.

4. To fail; to falter.

Here's a paper written in his hand;

A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,

Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shakespeare.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying,

Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jerem. xx. 10.

- HALT.* adj. [Goth. halts; Sax. healt. See the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind. St. Luke, xiv. 21.

- HALT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. A stop in a march.

The heavenly bands

Down from a sky of jasper lighted now

In Paradise, and on a hill made halt.

Milton, P. L.

Scouts each coast light armed scour,

Each quarter, to descry the distant foe,

Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight

In motion, or in halt. Milton, P. L.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies. Clarendon.

He might have made a halt till his foot and artillery came up to him. Clarendon.

- HALTER.* n. s. [from halt.]

1. One who limps.

Sherwood.

2. One who hesitates.

Those halters between two religions think they can do their homage to the true God and to the false. Stokes on the Prophets, (1659,) p. 412.

- HALTER.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson has given healtpe as the origin of halter, which, in order to make it pass, he has derived from half, the neck. The true Sax. word is healtpe, or haltpe; Germ. halfter. Serenius and Ihere derive it from the Su. Goth. haelda, or haella, to hold.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakespeare.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded;

wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note

Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat

Doth ribands. Clarendon.

He gets renown, who, to the halter near,

But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A cord; a strong string.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge.

Sandys.

- To HALTER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.

Some that are tall, and some that are dwarfs,

Some that are halter'd, and some that wear scarfs.

B. Jonson, Masques.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Alderbury.

- HALTINGLY.* adv. [from halt.] In a slow manner.

We must wait for the truth which comes halt- ingly behind. Dict. of Quotations.

- To HALVE.* v. a. [from half, halves.] To divide into two parts. See To HALF.

Then, says he, the moon has strength enough;

and is not yet halved. Stukely, Palæogr. Sacra, p. 66.

- HALVES. interj. [from half, halves being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam

Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb?

But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first.

Clarendon.

- HAM, whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon pam, a house, farm, or village.

Gibson's Camden.

- HAM. n. s. [ham, Sax. hamme, Dutch.]

1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining. Wiseman.

2. The thigh of a hog salted.

Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham pye

Are no rewards for want and infamy? Pope.

- HAMMACK.* See HAMMOCK.

- HAMADRYAD.* n. s. [Greek, ἡμα, together, and δρυς, an oak; Fr. hamadryade.] One of those wood-nymphs of antiquity, who were feigned to live and die with the trees to which they were attached.

The common opinion concerning the nymphs, whom the ancients called hamadryads, is more to the honour of trees than any thing yet mentioned:

It was thought that the fate of these nymphs had so near a dependance on some trees, more especially oaks, that they lived and died together.

Spectator, No. 589.

The hamadryad or nymph, who must necessarily have perished with the tree, appeared to him the next day. Ibid.

- HAMMATE.* adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Entangled; twisted together.

To explain cohesion by hamate atoms is accounted "ignotum per ignotum."

Bp. Berkeley, Stris, § 227.

- HAMMATED. adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Hooked; set with hooks.

To HAMMBLE.* v. a. [Sax. hamelan; Chaucer writes the word hamel; Dan. hamble.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME. n. s. [hama, Sax.] The collar by which a horse draws in a waggon.

HAME.* n. s. [Sax. ham.] Home. Our old word; and yet used in the north of England.

Therefore is I come, and eke Alein,

To grind our corn, and cary it hame again.

Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

To HAMMEL.* See To HAMBLE. Hamelin, or hamlin, is used for walking lame, in the Craven dialect.

HAMLET. n. s. [ham, Sax. and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon.

He pitch'd upon the plain

His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,

The country wasted and the hamlets burn'd.

Dryden.

HAMMLETED.* adj. [from hamlet.] Countified; accustomed only to a hamlet.

He is properly and pitiably to be counted alone that is illiterate, and unactively lives hamletted in some untravelled village of the duller country.

Feltham, Res. ii. 49.

HAMMMER. n. s. [hamep, Sax. hammer, Danish.]

1. The instrument, consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,

With busy hammers closing rivets up,

Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare.

The stuff will not work well with a hammer.

Bacon.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke.

Dryden, Juv.

2. Any thing destructive.

That renowned pillar of truth, and hammer of heresies, St. Augustine. Hakewill on Providence.

To HAMMMER.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a hammer.

His bones the hammer'd steel in strength surpass.

Sandys.

This christal here,

That shines so clear,

And carries in its womb a little day,

Once hammer'd will appear

Impure as dust, as dark as clay.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 57.

2. To forge or form with a hammer.

Useless the forgery

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass.

Milton, S. A.

Some hammer helmets for the fighting field.

Dryden.

Drudg'd like a smith, and on the anvil beat,
Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate. Dryden.
I must pay with hammered money instead of milled. Dryden.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour: used commonly in contempt.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To humble down thy husband and thyself?

Shakspeare.
He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witract, and picture it accordingly. Comden.

Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles. Hayward.

By this time Mr. Pryn's malice had hammered out something.

Apb. Laud, Hist. of his Trial, ch. 20.

To HAMMER. v. n.

1. To work; to be busy: in contempt.

Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering.

Shakspeare.

I have been studying how to compare
This prison where I live unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on't. Shakspeare.

2. To be in agitation.

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

Shakspeare.

HAMMERABLE.  adj.* [from hammer.] Capable of being formed by a hammer.

Sherwood.

HAMMERCLOTH.  n. s.* [hammer and cloth.]

The cloth that covers a coach-box. The coachman formerly used to carry a hammer, pincers, a few nails, &c. in a leather pouch belonging to his box; and this cloth was used for the hiding or concealing of them from the publick view.

Pegge.

HAMMERER. † n. s. [from hammer.] One who works with a hammer. Sherwood.

HAMMERHARD. n. s. [hammer and hard.]

Hammerhard is when you harden iron or steel with much hammering on it.

Moxon.

HAMMERMAN.  n. s.* [hammer and man.]

One who beats with a hammer at the forge.

Hard-handed and stiff ignorance, worthy a trowel or a hammerman.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

HAMMERWORT.  n. s.* [Sax. hamþr-þyrt.]

An herb. [parietaria.] See WORT.

HAMMOCK. † n. s. [hamaca, Sax. Dr. Johnson.—The word is Indian, amacha; and our old writers follow it. Temple, from whom alone Dr. Johnson cites an example, gives it hammock.] A swinging bed.

Cotton for the making of hamaccas, which are Indian beds.

Raleigh, Discov. of Guiana, (1596), p. 32. The Brazilians call their beds hamacas; they are as a sheet laced at both ends; and so they sit rocking themselves in them.

Sir R. Hawkins, Observ. Voy. to the S. Sea, § 27. The storm being over, they [sailors] commonly get into their beds or hamacks.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 6.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

Temple.

HAMPER. † n. s. [supposed by Minshew to be contracted from hand panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper. Dr. Johnson.—The word may be traced to the Sax. hnap, a cup; old Fr. hanap; Armor. anap; whence hanaperium, either a large cup, or a place in which to deposit cups, a cupboard. V. Du Cange in HANAPERIUM. Hence its application to a trunk, or box, in which any thing might be kept; and so hanaper, perhaps, for a treasury. Or it may be referred to the old word ambry, a cupboard; from almonry, or the place where alms were kept in order to be distributed. See AMBRY. Certain it is, that our word was formerly amper; though Dr. Johnson cites only the modern usage of it by Swift.] Formerly, a cupboard; a chest; a box; now, a large basket for carriage.

Either as a spiritual food and victual in their tabernacles, ampers, lutches; or as a mysterie in their locked closets.

Sheldon, Mirac. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 255. The Greek word, used by the translator, doth properly signify a hutch, or ampire to put victuals in, or a chest to lock treasure in.

Sheldon, ut suprà, p. 265. What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts! What hampers full of bleeding hearts! Swift.

To HAMPER. † v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes, that hamplyns in Teutonic is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius gives a much more probable origin, viz. "hampr, Icel. funiculus grossus lineus; Suet. Vulg. hampas med negot, re difficili intricatus laborare."]

1. To shackle; to entangle, as in chains or nets.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!

That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing. Herbert.

We shall find such engines to assail,

And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force.

Milton, S. A.

What was it but a lion hampered in a net!

L'Estrange.

Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;
Until they're hamper'd in the noose,

Too fast to dream of breaking loose. Hudibras.

They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards. Tillotson.

2. To ensnare; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.

She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby. Shakspeare.

3. To complicate; to tangle.

Engend'ring heats, these one by one unbind,
Stretch their small tubes, and hamper'd nerves unwind. Blackmore.

4. To perplex; to embarrass by many lets and troubles.

And when th' are hamper'd by the laws,
Release the lab'rs for the cause. Hudibras.

HAMPER.  n. s.* [from the verb.] A kind of chain or fetter.

The swarthy smith spits in his buckshorne fist,
And bids the men bring out the five-fold twist,
His shackles, shacklocks, hampers, givcs, and chains. Brownie, Brit. Past. B. i.

HAMSTRING. n. s. [ham and string.] The tendon of the ham.

A player, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue, and sound
'Twixt his stretched footing and the scaffoldage. Shakspeare.

On the hinder side it is guarded with the two hamstrings. Wiseman.

To HAMSTRING. † v. a. preter. and part. pass. hamstrung. [from the noun. The Saxons used hamelan in this sense. See To HAMBLE.] To lame by cutting the tendon of the ham; to cripple.

His doctrine, referring all to an absolute decree, hamstrings all industry, and cuts off the sinews of men's endeavours towards salvation.

Fuller's Holy State, (1648), p. 82

Hamstring'd behind, unhappy Gyges dy'd;
Then Phalaris is added to his side. Dryden.

HAN for have, in the plural. † Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. This old contraction of havan, however, is yet retained in the north of England. "They han," i. e. they have. Yorkshire, Lancashire, &c.

What concord han light and dark?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

HANAPER. † n. s. [hanaperium, low Lat. See HAMPER.] A treasury, an exchequer. The clerk of the hanaper receives the fees due to the king for the seal of charters and patents.

The fines for all original writs were wont to be immediately paid into the hanaper of the Chancery. Bacon.

To HANCE, or HAUNCE.  v. a.* [Fr. hausser. The parent of enhance.]

1. To lift up.

They change their almicranter for the haunsyng of the pole. Chaucer, Of the Astrolabe.

2. To raise; to enhance.

They hauncen their cause with false surquedrio. Chaucer, Compl. of Bl. Knight.

HANCES. n. s. pl.

1. [In a ship.] Falls of the fife-rails placed on bannisters on the poop and quarter-deck down to the gangway. Harris.

2. [In architecture.] The ends of elliptical arches; and these are the arches of smaller circles than the scheme, or middle part of the arch. Harris.

The sweep of the arch will not contain above fourteen inches, and perhaps you must cement pieces to many of the courses in the hance, to make them long enough to contain fourteen inches. Moxon.

HAND. † n. s. [hanþ, honþ, Sax. and in all the Teutonic dialects; and if not primitive, as Serenius observes, from the Goth. henda, to lay hold of.]

1. The palm with the fingers; the member with which we hold or use any instrument.

They laid hands upon him, and bound him hand and foot. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

They hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,

Through Eden took their solitary way.

Milton, P. L.

- That wonderful instrument the hand, was it made to be idle? Bp. Berkeley.
2. Measure of four inches; a measure used in the matches of horses; a palm.
3. Side, right or left.
For the other side of the court-gate, on this hand, and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits. Exod. xxxviii. 15.
4. Part; quarter; side.
It is allowed on all hands, that the people of England are more corrupt in their morals than any other nation this day under the sun. Swift.
5. Ready payment with respect to the receiver.
Of which offer the bassa accepted, receiving in hand one year's tribute. Knolles, Hist.
These two must make our duty very easy; a considerable reward in hand, and the assurance of a far greater recompence hereafter. Tilston.
6. Ready payment with regard to the payer. The example, however, seems to contain no more than the common expression out of hand, i.e. immediately. See Our.
Let not the wages of any man tarry with thee, but give it him out of hand. Tob. iv. 14.
7. Rate; price.
Time is the measure of business; money of wares; business is bought at a dear hand where there is small dispatch. Bacon.
8. Terms; conditions; rate.
Would you have any man without exception to take upon him the office of a schoolmaster? — No, on no hand.
Stubbs, Anat. of Abuses, (1583), P. ii. sign. D. 4.
With simplicity admire and accept the mystery; but at no hand by pride, ignorance, interest, or vanity, wrest it to ignoble senses.
Bp. Taylor, Worthly Communicant.
It is either an ill sign or an ill effect, and therefore at no hand consistent with humility.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
Employment and high place should become our greatest fear and terror, but at no hand our choice. Fell, Life of Hammond.
9. Act; deed; external action.
Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand. King Charles.
10. Labour; act of the hand.
Arborets and flowers
Imborder'd on each bank, the hand of Eve.
Milton, P. L.
Alnaschar was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life. Addison.
I rather suspect my own judgement, than I can believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it. Addison.
11. Performance.
Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves? Y'ave made a fine hand!
fellows,
There's a trim rabble let in. Shakespeare.
12. Power of performance.
He had a great mind to try his hand at a Spectator, and would fain have one of his writing in my works. Addison.
A friend of mine has a very fine hand on the violin. Addison.
13. Attempt; undertaking.
Out of them you dare take in hand to lay open the original of such a nation. Spenser on Ireland.
14. Manner of gathering or taking.
As her majesty hath received great profit, so may she, by a moderate hand, from time to time reap the like. Bacon.
15. Workmanship; power or act of manufacturing or making.

An intelligent being, coming out of the hands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifference to be reunited with its author, the source of his utmost felicity, is such a shock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection. Cheyne.

16. Manner of acting or performing.
The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his hand, and cheek'd his pride. Dryden.
17. Action; part in action.
God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an hand in. South.

Vein'd with clear springs, which ambient seas repair.

Sandys.

3. To choke and kill by suspending by the neck, so as that the ligature intercepts the breath and circulation.

Achitophel — hanged himself, and died.

2 Sam. xvii. 23.

He hath commission from thy wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Hanging supposes human soul and reason;

This animal's below committing treason:

Shall he be hang'd, who never could rebel?

That's a preferment for Achitophel.

Dryden.

4. To display; to show aloft.

Hang out our banners on the outward walls.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. To let fall below the proper situation; to decline.

There is a wicked man that hangeth down his head sadly; but inwardly he is full of deceit.

Eccles. xix. 26.

The beauties of this place should mourn;

The immortal fruits and flowers at my return

Should hang their wither'd head; for sure my breath

Is now more poisonous.

Dryden.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;

The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;

White lilies hang their heads, and soon decay;

And whiter snow in minutes melts away.

Dryden.

The cheerful birds no longer sing;

Each drops his head, and hangs his wing.

6. To fix in such a manner as in some directions to be movable.

The gates and the chambers they renewed, and hanged doors upon them.

1 Mac. iv. 57.

7. To cover or charge by any thing suspended.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night.

Shakspeare.

The pavement ever foul with human gore;

Heads and their mangled members hung the door.

Dryden.

8. To furnish with ornaments or draperies fastened to the wall.

Music is better in chambers wainscotted than hanged.

Bacon.

If e'er my pious father for my sake Did grateful off'rings on thy altars make,

Or I increas'd them with my sylvan toils,

And hung thy holy roofs with savage spoils,

Give me to scatter these.

Dryden.

Sir Roger has hung several parts of his house with the trophies of his labours.

Addison.

9. To HANG upon. To regard with passionate affection.

What though I be not so in grace as you, So hung upon with love, so fortunate.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

TO HANG.† v. n.

1. To be suspended; to be supported above, not below.

Over it a fair porticulis hong, Which to the gate directly did incline, With comely compass and compacture strong.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To depend; to fall loosely on the lower part; to dangle.

Upon her shoulders wings she wears, Like hanging sleeves, lin'd through with ears.

Hulibras.

If gaming does an aged sire entice, Then my young master swiftly learns the vice, And shakes in hanging sleeves the little box and dice.

Dryden.

3. To bend forward.

By hanging is only meant a posture of bending forward to strike the enemy.

Addison.

6. To rest upon by embracing.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss She vied.

Shakspeare.

To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,

Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

Shakspeare.

Faustina is described in the form of a lady sitting upon a bed, and two little infants hanging about her neck.

Peacham.

7. To hover; to impend.

He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy; And sundry blessings hang about his throne,

That speak him full of grace.

Shakspeare.

Odious names of distinction, which had slept while the dread of popery hung over us, were revived.

Atterbury.

8. To be loosely joined.

Whither go you? — To see your wife: is she at home? — Ay, and as idle as she may hang together.

Shakspeare.

9. To drag; to be incommodiously joined.

In my Lucia's absence Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden.

Addison.

10. To be compact or united; with together.

In the common cause we are all of a piece; we hang together.

Dryden.

Your device hangs very well together; but is it not liable to exceptions?

Addison.

11. To adhere; unwelcomely or incommodiously.

A cheerful temper shines on in all her conversation, and dissipates those apprehensions which hang on the timorous or the modest, when admitted to her presence.

Addison.

Shining landscapes, gilded triumphs, and beautiful faces, disperse that gloominess which is apt to hang upon the mind in those dark disconsolate seasons.

Addison.

12. To rest; to reside.

Sleep shall neither night nor day Hang upon his penthouse lid.

Shakspeare.

13. To be in suspense; to be in a state of uncertainty.

Thy life shall hang in doubt between thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life.

Deut.

14. To be delayed; to linger.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
On the proud crest of Satan. Milton, P. L.
She thrice essay'd to speak: her accents hung,
And fault'ring dy'd unfinished on her tongue.
Dryden.

15. To be dependant on.

Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours!
Shakspeare.
Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,
On those just sceptre hangs Europa's scale.
Prior.

16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.

Though wond'ring senates hung on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope.
17. To have a steep declivity.

Sussex marl shews itself on the middle of the sides of hanging grounds. Mortimer.

18. To be executed by the halter.

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs.
Pope.

19. To decline; to tend down.

His neck obliquely o'er his shoulders hung, Press'd with the weight of sleep that tames the strong. Pope.

20. To be displayed; to be shown.

Let not him, that plays the lion, pare his nails,
for they shall hang out as the lion's claws.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

21. To continue; as, the wind has hung easterly a great while.

22. To HANG FIRE. A term applied to guns, when the flame communicates not immediately from the pan to the charge.

HA'NGBY.* n. s. [hang and by.] A dependant: an expression of contempt.

The wasps and drones are unprofitable and harmful hangbyes, which live upon the spoil of others' labours. Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 62.

Sirrah, I pray thee be acquainted with my two hang-byes here; thou wilt take exceeding pleasure in 'em, if thou hear'st 'em once go: my wind-instruments! B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.
Hang them, a pair of railing hangbies!

Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

HA'NGER.† n. s. [from hang.] That by which any thing hangs: as, the pot-hangers.

Dr. Johnson.—Formerly that part of the girdle or belt, by which the sword was suspended, was called the hangers. See Minshew's Dict. "The hangers of a sword."

Six French rapiers and poniards with their assigns, as girdle, hangers, and so.

HA'NGER.† n. s. [from hang. Dr. Johnson.—Rather perhaps from the Persian hangier, a dagger. See Sir Thomas Herbert's Travels, p. 317.] A short curved sword; a short broad sword.

I clothed myself in my best apparel, girded on my hanger, stuck my pistols loaded in my belt.
Smollet, Roderick Random.

HA'NGER.* n. s. [from hang.] One who causes others to be hanged.

He [Sir Miles Fleetwood] was a very severe hanger of highwaymen. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 351.

HA'NGER-ON. n. s. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbræ, or hangers-on.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HA'NGING.† n. s. [from hang.]

1. Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakspeare.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings clothe the palace walls,
And sumptuous feasts are made in splendid halls.
Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakspeare.

3. Death by a halter.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage,
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page.
Pope.

4. Display; exhibition.

This unlucky mole misled several coxcombs;
and, like the hanging out of false colours, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party. Addison.

HA'NGING. participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakspeare.

What Æthiop's lips he has!
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!
Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter; a hanging matter.

HA'NGING-SLEEVES.* n. s. pl. Strips of the same stuff with the gown, hanging down the back from the shoulders, formerly worn by children of both sexes. See the second sense of the neuter verb hang.

These mistakes are to be left off with your hanging-sleeves. Ld. Halifax.

HA'NGMAN. n. s. [hang and man.]

1. The public executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

Who makes that noise there? who are you?
— Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him.

Shakspeare.

HANK.† n. s. [hank, Icelandic, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

A hank of gold or silver thread. Sherwood.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word, as Dr. Johnson says; yet, it may be added, very common; as, to have a hank upon a person, i. e. to have a hold upon him.

Mr. H. Tooke hence considers hank as the past participle of hang, i. e. to have something hung upon him. But the Icelandic hank, which denotes a chain, a collar, is here also a satisfactory etymon; and the Latin uncus may accompany it.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Decay of Piety.

In Horace, Necessity is furnished, if I may so express myself, with her hank and her fastenings, which she carries in her brazen hand.

Whitely, Etymol. Magn. p. 267.

3. In naval language, hanks are wooden rings fixed on the stays.4. In the north of England, a withy or rope for fastening a gate. [Swed. hank, the same.]

To HANK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To form into hanks. Used in the north of England.

To HA'NKER.† v. n. [hunker, Dutch.
Serenius would refer it to hank; or, secondly, to the Su. henga after, to desire greatly.]

1. To long importunately; to have an incessant wish: it has commonly (but not always) after before the thing desired.

It is scarcely used but in familiar language, Dr. Johnson says; yet it has been employed on the most serious subjects. See HANKERING.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant hankers after something else.

L'Estrange.

Dost thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town.

Addison.

2. To linger with expectation.

It cannot but be very dangerous for you to hanker hereabouts.

Stokes on the Prophets, (1659,) p. 220.

HA'NKERING.* n. s. [from hanker.] Strong desire; longing.

And now the saints begin their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowel hankerings,

To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers.

L'Estrange.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankerings
after its ancient liberty.

Addison.

We shall be able to part both with it and them,
[the body and its delights,] without any great regret or reluctance; and to live from them forever, without any disquieting longings or hanker- ings after them. Scott, Chr. Life, P. i. ch. 3.

P P

To HA'NKLE.* v. n. [from hank.] To twist; to entangle. Still used in the north of England.

HA'NSEL.* See HANDSEL.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.

That roughish leer of yours makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HA'NTLE, or HA'NDTLE.* n. s. A handful; much. A northern word. Grose, and Wulbram's Chesh. Gloss.

HAP.† n. s. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tyrwhitt refers happe in Chaucer to the Saxon; but Mr. Chalmers observes, that there is no such word, of this meaning, in that language: Hap is, in the Welsh, chance, luck, good fortune; and anhap, mischance, as already observed. Serenius, however, notices under happy, the Goth. hap, insperata felicitas.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms. Q. enwrap. Spenser, F. Q.

Her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Bosz. Ruth, ii. 3.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield.

Sidey.
To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see the example followed.

Hooker.
Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared she among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray;
Her life had full of haps and hazards been.

Fairfax.

HAP-HA'RLOT.* n. s. A coarse coverlet.

Wachter's strange commentary on this word is, "Hap-harlot, a close covering;
Lat. cento, lecti stragulum crassius,
q. d. a harlot by hap, &c. si desit mere-trix, detur aliquid fortè fortuna ad fovendas artus, &c. Vox ludicra!" — The word is an old expression for a coverlet;
and is in the former part of it derived from hap, to cover; not from hap, chance, as Wachter pretends. The latter part might be thought to be from lit, a bed, like coverlet, if the word were not written hap-harlot, and hap-harlot, by our old writers; though Ainsworth writes it happarlet. The allusion is to harlot (not in Wachter's coarse sense of it, but) in the sense of a servant; implying that it was a rug fit only for a low person or servant; as dagswain, a kindred term, seems to have been a similar article proper only for one of low rank, a swain. Barret, in his Alveary of 1580, thus explains it, "a coarse covering made of divers shreds;"

and Huloet, before him, "a coverlet so called." The ridiculous remark of Wachter required animadversion; especially as it has been admitted into the Rev. Mr. Lemon's Etymological Dictionary without refutation. Hap, or happin, is still our northern word for a rug or coarse coverlet.

Our fathers, yea and we ourselves also, have lien full oft upon straw pallets, on rough mats covered only with a sheet under coverlets made of dagswain, or hop-harlots: I use their own terms.
Harrison, Desc. of Eng. ch. 12. Pref. to Holmshed.

HAP-HA'ZARD. n. s. Chance; accident:
perhaps originally hap hazardè.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

HAR'ANGUE.† n. s. [harangue, French.]

The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of hearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, oranger, aranger, haranguer. Dr. Johnson. —

The word is merely the pure and regular past participle, hpanz, of the Anglo-Saxon verb hpingan, to sound, or to make a great sound; (as hpino is also used.) And M. Casseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says, "Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contention de voix." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 274. The French word is from the English.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Assemble, and harangues are heard; but soon

In factious opposition. Milton, P. L.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

TO HAR'ANGUE.† v. n. [haranguer, Fr.]

To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

The House impeach him; Coningsby harangues.

Pope.

TO HAR'ANGUE. v. a. To address by an oration; as, he harangued the troops.

HAR'ANGUE.† n. s. [from harangue.] An orator; a public speaker; generally with some mixture of contempt.

Turns the occasion takes, and cries aloud,

Talk on, you quaint haranguers of the crowd. Dryden, Æn.

We are not to think every clamorous haranguer, or every splenetic repiner against a court, is therefore a patriot. Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, § 23.

TO HAR'ASS.† v. a. [harasser, Fr. from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to

Du Cange. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Sax. hepzan, to spoil, to lay waste;

a military word, from which also to har- row is derived; Icel. herian; Su. Goth.

haeria, the same, from haer, an armed force; Sax. hepe. Serenius partly inclines to this etymon. The primitive sense of the word, therefore, which has hitherto been overlooked, is that of spoliation by an enemy.

1. To desolate; to waste; to destroy.

A multitude of tyrants, which have for a long while harassed and wasted the soul. Hammond, Works, iv. 562.

version, given to hospitality,] apt to teach.

1 Tim. iii. 2. (Various Old Transl.)

HA'RBOUR.† n. s. [herberg, French;

herberg, Dutch; albergo, Italian. Dr.

Johnson. — The original seems to be the

Sax. hepebeþga, a military station, a lodging for soldiers, from hepe, an army, and beþgan, to protect, to shelter;

whence our old word harborough, or harbrough. See HARBOROUGH. From this usage of the word, which obtained among the Germans also, the sense of it as an inn, or a lodging for any persons, was adopted into several languages.]

HA'RLEQUIN.† n. s. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le Quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented M. Harlay's house, whom his friends called Harlequino, little Harlay. Trevoux. Dr. Johnson. — M. de Harlay, Mr. Malone observes, lived in the time of Henry the Third of France, viz. 1574—1589; and M. Guet says, that he had the same account, which Menage relates, from Harlequin himself. Notwithstanding this, the name of harlequinus is found in a letter of M. Raulin in 1521. "Vis antiquam illam Harlequin familiam revocare, ut videatur mortuus inter mundanæ curiæ nebulas et caligines equitare?" p. 28. Further, it might almost as well be considered a diminutive of the old Fr. arlot, a cheat, as of M. Harlay's name. Nash, in the Epistle Dedicatory to his Almond for a Parrot, (about 1589,) thus speaks of this personage. "Coming from Venice the last summer, and taking Bergamo in my waye homeward to England, it was my happe, sojourning there some four or five days, to light in fellowship with that famous Franca Hip' Harleken, who, perceiving me to be an Englishman by my habit and speech, asked me many particulars of the order and maner of our plays, which he termed by the name of representations." A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zany.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;
And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary.

Prior.

To HA'RLEQUIN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To conjure away, like a harlequin.

Monkeys have been

Extreme good doctors for the spleen;

And kiten, if the humour hit,

Has harlequin'd away the fit.

Green, Poem of the Spleen, ver. 96.

HA'RLOCK.* n. s. A plant: It may be a corruption of charlock. But see also HARDOCK.

The honey-suckle, the harlocke,

The lilly, &c.

Dayton, Ecl. (1599.)

HA'RLOT.† n. s. [herlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others from horelet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Harlot is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge. Dr. Johnson. — Hickeys first suggested that horelet (i. e. harlot) is the diminutive of hore, in which manner whore was formerly written; from the Sax. hop. Mr. H. Tooke agrees with Hickeys, pronouncing the word as the past participle of hyan, to hire, i. e. denoting any person hired. Thus Mr. Bagshaw deduces it from hire and let; and cites, in proof, an old indictment against certain women, "common harlots of their bodies." This, I may add, agrees with the ancient notion of this character; a harlot being, as Plautus observes, quæ ipsa sese venditat. Mil. Glorios. A. 2. S. 3. — Bullet, however, refers the word to the Welsh herlodes, and Mr. Chalmers agrees with him; herlodes meaning, in that language, a hoiden or romping girl; and herled and herlotyn, a stripling, a youth. And thus, in our old language, harlot was applied to both sexes. In the Rom. of the Rose, "king of harlots," as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is Chaucer's translation of "roy des ribaults"; and, as a writer, nearly two centuries before Mr. Tyrwhitt, remarks, "the kinge of ribaldes or harlots, or evill and wicked persons, was an officer of great acceptem in tymes paste — sic autem appellatur, quia jam tum homines perditū RIBALDI, et RIBALDE mulieres puellaque perditæ vocantur. Regis nomen superiori aut judici tribuitur, &c." Fr. Thynne's Animadv. on Speght's Chaucer, 1598. Thus harlots (ribaldi et ribaldae) were clearly of both sexes, the Fr. ribault, a rogue, and ribaulde, a trull. Our old language applies the word, in this sense, to men. In the Cornish, harlot means a rogue. So in old Fr. arlot, "tripon, coquin, voleur." Roq. Indeed, so far back as about the close of our Henry the Third's reign, a royal mandate was issued against "certain vagrant persons calling themselves harlots, maintaining idleness in divers parts of our realme; most shameleslie making their meetings, &c. against the honestie of the church and good manners." Fox's Acts and Mon. p. 305. Fox considers them as "people of a lewd disposition and uncivill," and at the same time as a pretended religious order. "It is most probable," he adds, "that the reproachful name of harlot had its beginning from hence."

1. A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with

Some harlot's spirit.

Shakespeare.

They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots.

'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.

Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged, long-practised sinner. South.

HARMONICAL. } adj. [ἀρμονικός; harmo- HARMONICK. } nique, Fr.]

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other; less properly.

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to ass,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

HARMO'NICALLY.* adv. [from harmonical.] Musically.

The mind, as some suppose, harmonically composed, is roused up at the tunes of music.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 295.

Anthems — which proceed in one full yet distinct strain, harmonically, and, at the same time, intelligibly. Mason on Church Music, p. 130.

HARMO'NIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, Fr. from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,
And all th' harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall die. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move

Harmonious numbers. Milton, P. L.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him thought it musical.

Dryden.

HARMO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruised;
But as the world harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillingfleet.

HARMO'NIOUSNESS. n. s. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

HA'RMONIST.* n. s. [Fr. harmoniste.]

1. One who understands the concord of sounds; one who delights in music.

Sweet harmonist, and beautiful as sweet.

Young, Night Th. 3.

I am well aware, that many profound harmonists may be disgusted at what I have already advanced, and think their craft in danger, when I seem to attack the very citadel of music.

Mason on Church Music, p. 103.

A musician may be a very skilful harmonist, and yet be defective in the talents of melody, air, and expression. A. Smith on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

2. One who brings together corresponding passages on a subject; an harmonizer.

He endeavourth to shew how, among the fathers, Augustin and Hieron are flatly against the harmonist. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 226.

Romanusq; Iyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests' cruel wreck He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,

Through the sweet music which his harp did make, Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd God and his works. Milton, P. L.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire; The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies The shell, as lightest first begins to rise;

This when sweet Orpheus struck, to listening rocks He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [heappian, Saxon; harper, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev. xiv. 2.

The helmed cherubim, And sworded seraphim, Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd, Harping in loud and solemn quire, With unexpressive notes to Heaven's new-born heir. Milton, Ode Nativ.

You harp a little too much upon one string. Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke, Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason For inequality; but let your reason serve

To make the truth appear. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

He seems Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am, Nor that he knew I was. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To HARP. v. a.

1. To play upon the harp.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harp'd? 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

Some drawn with nets, some hang upon the hook. Dryden.

HARPO'ONER.* See HARPONEER.

HAR'PSICORD.† n. s. [old Fr. harpechorde. Our word was formerly written harpiscon.] A musical instrument, strung with wires, and played by striking keys.

Let them run divisions on the harpiscon or virginals. Parthenia Sacra (1633,) p. 144.

He would exactly perform his part of many things to a harpiscon or theorbo. Fell, Life of Hammond.

I shall allow them to be harpisichords, a kind of music, which every one knows is a consort by itself. Tatler, No. 153.

HA'RPY. n. s. [harpypia, Lat. harpie, harpie, Fr.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Ralegh.

That an harpie is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpie. Shakspeare.

HAR'QUEBUSS.† n. s. [See ARQUEBUSE. Ital. arca bouza, the bow with a hole; whence archibous, arcubugio. Our old spelling was also harcabuse, or harca-buze.] A hand gun.

There entered into it as good as a dozen Frenchmen, well appointed with their harcabuses and matches lighted. Shelton, Transl. of Don Quix. iv. 14.

HAR'QUEBUSSIER. n. s. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

HARR.* n. s. A storm proceeding from the sea. See EAGRE. Coles.

Q Q

HARRATE'EN.* n. s. A kind of stuff, or cloth.

Mean time, thus silver'd with meanders gay,
In mimic pride the snail-wrought tissue shines,
Perchance of tabby or of harrateen
Not ill expressive; such the power of snails!
Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

HARRIDAN. n. s. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.
Swift.

HARRIER.* n. s. A hare-hound. See HARIER.

HARRICO.* See HARICOT.

HARROW. n. s. [charroux, French; harcle, Germ. a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden.
Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer.

TO HARROW.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tusser.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can'st thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job, xxxix, 10.

Let the Volscians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shakespeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood, Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakespeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. [Sax. heprian; Fr. harier. See TO HARASS.]

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions; to subdue. [Sax. heprian.] Obsolete.

And he, that harrow'd hell with heavy stroke,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Spenser, F. Q.

Most glorious Lord of Life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion; to overpower. [This should rather be written harry. See TO HARRY.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear. Milton, Comus.

HARROW.† interj. [old Fr. harau, haro; answering to the modern hue and cry; Su. Goth. haerop, from haer, her, an army, and op, a cry.] An exclamation of sudden distress; a cry for help. Obsolete.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Spenser.

HARROWER.† n. s. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

The natives were likewise bound to give three plowdays each; and every plow was to be allowed four boon-loaves, and to harrow three days; and every harrower was allowed a brown loaf, and two herrings a day. Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 143.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

TO HARRY.† v. a. [Fr. harier; Sax. heprian. See TO HARASS.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle; to vex.

Minsheu.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.—
— I repent me much

That I so harry'd him. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

2. In Scotland and in some parts of the north of England it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See the fifth sense of TO HARROW. Milton also has thus used harry, as Mr. Brockett has observed.

The Saxons, with perpetual landings and invasions harried the South coast of Britain.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. ii.

TO HARRY.* v. n. To make harassing incursion.

What made your roguiships

Harrying for virtuals here?

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

HARSH.† adj. [Dutch, harsch; Su. Goth. harsk. Formerly written harish, and also harsk.]

1. Austere; roughly; sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear.

Denham.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denigrate that numberless variety of relishes.

Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakespeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line.

Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,

To serve duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Bp. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise.

Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

Atterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles' points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a poor temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shaksp.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

HARSHNESS.† n. s. [from harsh.] It is rarely used in the plural: but Jeremy Taylor has somewhere so employed it.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort and not burn. Shakespeare.

Thy beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love,
Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness. Donne, Poems, p. 257.

HART.† n. s. [heort, Saxon.] A he-deer; the male of the hind; the stag.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.

The deer

And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May, Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. s. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. s. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn.

Woodward.

HARTSHORN. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.
HARTSTONGUE.† n. s. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

So saxifrage is good, and hartstongue, for the stone. Drayton, Polyol. S. 13.

HARTWORT. n. s. [tordylium, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST.† n. s. [hæppert, Saxon; herfst, Dutch; herbst, German. Some derive it from the Lat. herba and festum, q. d. festivitas herbarum; others, from Hertha, the Vesta of the ancient Germans, and Dutch, feest, q. d. the feast of the Earth. Serenius, from the Su. Goth. ar, the year, and vist, provision, q. d. provision for the whole year.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakspeare.
With harvest work he is worse than in spring.
L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakspeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour.
Let us the harvest of our labour eat,
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. s.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn it is reap'd;

Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,

And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay. Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shakspeare.

HARVEST-LORD. n. s. The head reaper at the harvest.
Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Fusser.

HARVEST-QUEEN.† n. s. [harvest and queen.] An image apparelled in great finery, crowned with flowers, a sheaf of corn placed under her arm, and a sickle in her hand, carried out of the village in the morning of the conclusive reaping-day, with music and much clamour of the reapers into the field, where it stands fixed on a pole all day; and, when the reaping is done, is brought home in like manner. This they call the harvest-queen, and it represents the Roman Ceres.

Hutchinson, Hist. of Northumberland.

Adain the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flowers a garland, to adorn
Her tresses, and her rural labours crown;
As reapers oft are wont their harvest-queen.

Milton, P. L.

To HARVEST. v. a. [from the noun.]
To gather in. [mestiver.] Sherwood.

I have seen a stock of reeds harvested and stacked, worth two or three hundred pounds.

Pennant, Tour in Scotland.

HARVESTER.† n. s. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

I have appointed you, as harvesters, to go abroad in all the world, and bring in converts to heaven.

Hammond on the New Testament, 1 Pet. ii. 8.

HARVESTMAN.† n. s. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

In this large field of the Scriptures, a man may gather some ears untouched after the harvestmen, how diligent soever they were.

Abp. Parker, Pref. to the Old Test.

Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakspeare.

HARUMSCARUM.* adj. A low but frequent expression applied to flighty persons, persons always in a hurry; as if they were hared or frightened themselves, or haring others by their precipitancy; as, he is a harumscarum fellow. Grose, who notices this colloquial term, connects it with the verb hare, to affright, to make wild; others, both with that verb and with scare, though in our northern parts the word is harumstarum; and some, with the German herum, here and there. Mr. Brockett adds the German expression, herum-schar, a wandering troop; plural, scharen, vagabonds.

To HASH. v. a. [hacher, Fr.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm,
Above his head, and rain'd a storm,
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness; but hashed up in haste. Garth.

HASH.* n. s. [from the verb. Fr. hachis.] Minced meat; "a hachee, a sliced gallinawry, or minced meat." Cotgrave.

HASK.† n. s. [Swedish, hwass, a rush.] This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASK.* adj. [hisco, Lat.] Parched; coarse; rough; dry. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

HASLET. } n. s. [hasla, Icelandick, a HASLET. } bundle; hastereh, hastereau, hastier, Fr.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP.† n. s. [hæpp, Saxon; whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.]

1. A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us.

Locke.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
 To oppose his hatred fully. Shakespeare.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world. Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able.

Wake.
 She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church. Swift.
Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and lust the guilt of adultery. Sherlock.

After an hour and a half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city. Bacon.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd, The navy under sail, the haven clear'd. Denham.

We may be shipwreck'd by her breath: Love, favour'd once with that sweet gale, Doubles his haste, and fills his sail, Till he arrive, where she must prove, The haven, or the rock of love. Waller.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of Heaven visits, Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Shakespeare.

HA'VENER. n. s. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers as receiver, havener, and customer. Carver.

HA'VER. n. s. [from have.] Possessor; holder.

Valour is the chiefest virtue, and Most dignifies the haver. Shakespeare.

HA'VER.† This is a common word in the northern counties for oats; as haver bread for oat bread: perhaps properly aven, from avena, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. Haver is, however, the Dutch word.

When you would anneal, take a blue stone, such as they make haver or oat cakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Feacham.

HA'VERSACK. n. s.* A kind of coarse bag, in which soldiers carry provisions.

HAUGHT. n. s.* See Haw.

HAUGHT.† adj. [old French halt, haült, and then haut; from the Latin altus. Our own word was also written haut, as well as haught.]

1. Haughty; insolent; proud; contemptuous; arrogant. Obsolete.

Proud Lucifer, below from the heavens on high Down to the pit of hell below was cast, — More haut of heart was not before his fall, Than was this proud and pompous cardinal. Mir. for Mag. p. 822.

The proud insulting queen, With Clifford and the haught Northumberland, Have wrought the easy melting king like wax. Shakespeare.

No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man; Nor no man's lord. Shakespeare.

[Thou] drov'st out nations proud and haut. Milton, Ps. 80.

2. High; proudly magnanimous.

His courage haught Desir'd of foreign foemen to be known, And far abroad for strange adventures sought. Spenser, F. Q.

This haught resolve becomes your majesty. Marlowe, K. Edu. II.

HA'UGHTILY.† adv. [from haughtily.] Proudly; arrogantly; contemptuously.

Neither shall they go haughtily. Micah, ii. 3. Her heavenly form too haughtily she priz'd;

His person hated, and his gifts despis'd. Dryden.

HA'UGHTINESS.† n. s. [from haughtily.] Pride; arrogance; the quality of being haughtily.

Weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. Such was the haughtiness of his mind. 2 Macc. v. 21.

By the head we make known our supplications, our threatenings, our mildness, our haughtiness, our love, and our hatred. Dryden.

HA'UGHTY.† adj. [from haught. See HAUGHT.]

1. Proud; insolent; arrogant; contemptuous.

His wife, being a woman of a haughty and imperious nature, and of a wit superior to his, quickly resented the disrespect she received from him. Clarendon.

I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,
And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,
In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate.

Dryden.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:
Her goodness takes our liberty away;
And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway.

Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous; of high hazard. Obsolete.

Who now shall give me words and sound
Equal unto this haughty enterprize?
Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground

My lowly verse may loftily arise? Spenser, F. Q.

4. High; proudly magnanimous.

Valiant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

5. High; lofty. Not now in use.

The wholesome hearbes, the hauitie pleasant trees. Sonnet, K. James's Lepanto, (1591.)
Yea, God who rules the haughty heaven abigh,
Enrich'd my realm, with foyson of each thing;
Abundant store did make my people sing.

Mir. for Mag. p. 206.

HA'VING.† n. s. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune. [Span. hazienda.]

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you;
Hold, there is half my coffer.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side, was alleged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the shield.

Sidney.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion;
And having that, do chok their service up,
Ev'n with the having. Shakespeare, As you like it.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scottish dialect. [haef, Su. Goth. from haefva, to become.] It may possibly be the meaning, Dr. Johnson says, in the following example from Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor; and yet in a note upon the word, in the edition of the poet, he positively states it to be, in this very passage, the same, as estate or fortune; which indeed it is. In Devonshire, according to Grose, havance denotes manners, good behaviour.

The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Poins: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakespeare.

HA'VIOUR.† n. s. [for behaviour, Dr. Johnson says. But it is not an abbreviation of behaviour; for it was formerly a very common word, and is yet retained in low language; as, do you think I have forgot my haviours, i. e. my manners? from the Su. Goth. haefva, to become.] Conduct; manners.

Her heavenly haviour, her princely grace,
Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

Their ill haviour garres men missey
Both of their doctrine and their fay.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Put thyself

Into a haviour of less fear. Shakespeare, Cymb.

TO HAUL. v. a. [haler, French to draw.]

To pull; to draw; to drag by violence.

A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and to persons, awkwardness or rudeness. This word is liberally exemplified in hale; etymology is regarded in hale, and pronunciation in haul.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanic dirty hands. Shaks.

The youth with songs and rhimes,
Some dance; some haul the rope. Denham.

Some the wheels prepare,
And fasten to the horses' feet; the rest
With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast.

Dryden.

In his grandeur he naturally chuses to haul up others after him whose accomplishments most resemble his own. Swift.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;
The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Pope.

Romp-loving miss

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

To HAUL the Wind.* To direct the course of a ship nearer to that point of the compass, from which the wind arises.

1. The stem or stalk of corn; also, the stubble gathered after the corn is housed.

In champion countrie a pleasure they take
To mow up their haume for to brew and to bake,
The haume is the straw of the wheat or the rie,
Which once being reaped, they mow by and by.

Tusser.

Having stripped off the haum or binds from the poles, as you pick the hops, stack them up.

Mortimer.

2. A horse-collar. Sherwood's Dict.

1632. Still used in the north of England.

HAUNCH. n. s. [hanche, Dutch; hanche, French; anca, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind,
Whose right haunch earst my stedfast arrow strake?

Spenser.

To make a man able to teach his horse to stop and turn quick, and to rest on his haunches is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Locke.

2. The rear; the hind part.

Thou art a Summer bird,
Which ever in the haunch of Winter sings
The lifting up of day. Shakespeare.

HA'UNCHE* adj. [from haunch.] Having haunches; as "big-haunched," i. e. having large hips or haunches. Sherwood.

To HAUNT.† v. a. [hanter, French.]

Haunte thyself, [in the present version exercise thyself] to pitee. Wicliffe, 1 Tim. iv. 7.

2. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears.

Sidney.

Now we being brought known unto her, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, she continually almost haunted us.

Sidney.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Shakespeare.

She this dang'rous forest haunts,
And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now

Secur'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,

Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades. Milton, P. L.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope.

3. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;

I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of.

Shakespeare.

Oh, could I see my country seat!

There, leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

4. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions break my sleep by night.

Fairfax.

All these the woes of Oedipus have known
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town.

Pope.

To HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.

I've charg'd thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee. Shakespeare, Othello.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd

The air is delicate. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

HAUNT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

She passed them of Ipres and of Gaunt.

Chaucer, Prolog. C. T.

2. Place in which one is frequently found.

Know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there. 1 Sam. xiii. 22.

We set toils, nets, gins, snares, and traps, for beasts and birds in their own haunts and walks.

L'Estrange.

To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his way,
Where he would dwell, or whither stray. Prior.

A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of Heaven, he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd.

Pope.

3. Habit of being in a certain place.

The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary.

Arbutnot.

HA'UNTER. n. s. [from haunt.] Frequenter; one that is often found in any place.

The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes.

Wotton on Education.

O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies. Dryden.

HA'VOCK.† n. s. [hafog, Welsh, devastation. Dr. Johnson.—But that is supposed to be from the Sax. hapoc, the hawk; whence our havock for rapine or devastation. Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.

Having been never used to have any thing of their own, they make no spare of any thing, but hawk and confusion of all they meet with.

Spenser on Ireland.

Saul made hawk of the church. Acts, viii. 3.

Ye gods! what hawk does ambition make Among your works! Addison, Cato.

The Rabbits, to express the great hawk which has been made of the Jews, tell us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea. Addison.

If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater hawk than any history mentions. Cheyne.

HA'VOCK.† interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter; a term formerly meaning that no quarter would be given.

That noo man be so hardy to crye havokey, upon payne of hym that is so founde begynner, to dye therefore; and the remenaunt to be emprysoned, and theyr bodies punished at the kynges will.

Statutes of Warre, &c. by K. Hen. VIII. (1513.)

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?

Cry hawk, kings. Shakespeare.

Até by his side, Cries hawk! and lets loose the dogs of war.

Shakespeare.

To HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy; to lay waste.

Whosoever they leave, the soldier spoileth and hawketh; so that, between both, nothing is left.

Spenser on Ireland.

See, with what heat these dogs of hell advance, To waste and hawk yonder world, which I So fair and good created! Milton, P. L.

HAUST.* n. s.

1. A draught; as much as a man can swallow. [Lat. haustus.] Coles.

2. A dry cough. [Sax. hȝorta, a cough; Icel. hooste, the same.] Ray and Grose place it among our north-country words.

HA'UTOY.† n. s. [Fr. haut bois, q. d. high wood; a term said to be given to this instrument, because its tone is louder than that of the violin. It is often written, and almost always pronounced, hoboy.] A wind instrument.

I told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have truss'd him and all his apparel into an eel-skin; the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him. Shakespeare.

The haut boy, not as now with latten bound, And rival with the trumpet for his sound, But soft, and simple, at few holes breath'd time And tune too. B. Jonson, Horace's Art of Poetry. Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes. Dryden.

HA'UTOY Strawberry. See STRAWBERRY. HAUTE'UR.* n. s. [French.] Pride; insolence; haughtiness.

2. An excrescence in the eye. Huloet.

3. A small piece of ground adjoining to an house. In Scotland they call it haugh. [Sax. haga; Germ. and Icel. hage, a field; Dan. haw, a garden. An inclosed place is our oldest sense of the word. Haw, a hedge, or any inclosure. Ray.]

Ther was a polkat in his hawe, That, as he sayd, his capons had yslawe.

Chaucer, Pardoun. Tale.

Upon the haw at Plymouth is cut out in the ground the portraiture of two men, with clubs in their hands, whom they term Gog and Magog.

Carew.

4. Formerly, a dale; written haugh, in Coke upon Lyttelton. [Norm. Fr. haugh, a valley.]

5. A hillock. [Dan. haughur, tumulus.] Written also haugh. Craven Dialect.

HAW.* n. s. [See HA.] An intermission or hesitation of speech.

To HAW. v. n. [Perhaps corrupted from hawk or hack.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.

'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and having upon't, he agreed to undertake the job. L'Estrange.

HAWHAW.* n. s. [apparently a duplication of haw, in the sense of any inclosure. See the third sense of HAW. It is sometimes written haha, and is absurdly pretended by Dr. Ash to be derived from the expression of surprise at the sight of it!] A fence or bank that interrupts an alley or walk, sunk between two slopes, and not perceived till approached; sometimes, a kind of canal; intended generally, to open prospects by removing walls or other impediments, and yet to preserve a fence.

Wise men did not, to be thought gay, Then compliment their power away; But lest, by frail desires misled, The girls forbidden paths should tread, Of ignorance rais'd the safe high wall, But we hawhaws that shew them all: Thus we at once solicit sense, And charge them not to break the fence.

Green's Poem of the Spleen, (1754), ver. 277.

HAWK. n. s. [hebog, Welsh; hapoc, Sax. accipiter, Lat.]

1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.

Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will soar

Above the morning lark. Shakespeare.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to cut his hawk's meat.

Peacham.

Whence borne on liquid wing The sounding corbeil shoots; or where the hawk, High in the betting cliff, his airy builds.

Thomson.

2. [hoch, Welsh.] An effort to force phlegm up the throat.

To HAWK.† v. n.

1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk. [from the noun.]

Ride unto St. Alban's,

Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Shakespeare.

He that hawks at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game. Locke.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;

With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.

A falcon towering in her pride of place, Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.

Shakespeare.

Whether upward to the moon they go, Or dream the winter out in caves below, Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dryden.

3. [hochio, Welsh.] To force up phlegm with a noise.

Come sit, sit, and a song. — Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice? Shakespeare.

They are bound to a Pythagorean silence and attention, and are prohibited hawking, spitting, or coughing.

Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630), p. 75.

To HAWK.* v. a. To expectorate with noise.

She complained of a stinking tough phlegm which she hawked up in the mornings. Wise man.

To HAWK.* v. a. [from hocker, German, a higgler, a huckster.] To sell by proclaiming it in the streets.

His works were hawk'd in every street; But seldom rose above a sheet. Swift.

HAWK-EYED.* adj. [hawk and eye.] Having a keen eye, like that of the hawk.

HAWK-NOSED.* adj. [hawk and nose.] Having an aquiline nose. This word is sometimes corrupted into hook-nosed.

He was tall of stature, and slender, being hawk-nosed. Life of Bernard Gilpin, (1629), p. 59.

If flat-nosed, she is gentle and courteous; if hawk-nosed, she seems then to be of a kindly race. Ferrand, Love Med. p. 55.

HA'WKED. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.

Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HA'WKER.† n. s.

1. A falconer. [Sax. hæfecepe.] Huloet. Hawkers and hunters, drunkards, fornicators, adulterers, having no other god but their belly.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 394.

2. One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street. [Germ. hocker.]

I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the consideration of the greatest person. Swift.

To grace this honour'd day the queen proclaims, By herald hawkers, high heriwick games: She summons all her sons; an endless band Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land.

Pope.

HA'WKING.* n. s. [from To hawk.]

1. The diversion of flying hawks at fowls. One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

2. The act of forcing up with noise. Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough. Harvey.

Nor all the winter long thy hay rich stow.

May, Virgil.

Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk.

Mozon.

By some hay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn.

Dryden.

The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks.

Mortimer.

Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale.

Swift.

To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock, Dr. Johnson says. It is, no doubt, from dancing in a kind of circle; and is probably from the Fr. huit, eight; for the dance is borrowed by us from the French. It was formerly written hey, as if an abbreviation of heydeguyes, a country-dance or round. See HEYDEGUYES.

He taught them rounds and guiding eyes to tread,

And about trees to cast themselves in rings.

Sir J. Davies, Orchest. (1599.)

I will play on the tabor to the orchests,
And let them dance the hay.

Shakespeare.

This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,

There dancing hays by two and three,
Just as your fancy casts them.

Drayton.

The gum and glist'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part

Hangs down,

Looks just as if that day

Snails there had crawl'd the hay.

Suckling.

HAY.† n. s. [Sax. hæg; old Fr. haye. See HAW.]

1. A hedge. In Norfolk, a clipt hedge.

For there is neither bush nor hay

In May that it n'll shrouded bene.

Chaucer, Rom. Rose.

Hay-bote, or hedge-bote, is wood for repairing hays, hedges, or fences.

Blackstone.

2. A net which encloses the haunt of an animal.

Setting the toils and pitching the haies.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. p. 293.

Scott, Discov. of Wüchcraft, p. 152.

HA'YWARD.* n. s. [from hay.] A keeper of the common herd of cattle of a town or village; who is bound to take care, that they neither crop nor break the hedges of enclosed grounds.

Sherwood, and Chambers.

HA'ZARD.† n. s. [hasard, French; azar, Spanish; haski, Runick, danger.]

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakespeare.

I will upon all hazards well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.

Shakespeare.

Where the mind does not perceive connection, there men's opinions are not the product of judgement, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures without choice and without direction.

Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the Father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved.

Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate.

Dryden.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers.

3. A game at dice. [perhaps from the Fr. as, an ace. Alan Chartier employs azart, in conformity to this etymon. V. Morin. in HASARD.]

Hasard is veray moder of lesinges,

And of deceit.

Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

The duke playing at hazard, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold.

Swift.

To HA'ZARD. v. a. [hasarder, Fr.] To expose to chance; to put into danger.

They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give.

Hooker.

It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge, to hazard himself against a man of private condition.

Hayward.

By dealing indifferently mercies to all, you may hazard your own share.

Sherlock.

To HA'ZARD. v. n.

1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,

Before you hazard; for in choosing wrong,

I lose you company.

Shakespeare.

2. To adventure; to run the danger.

She from her fellow-provinces would go,

Rather than hazard to have you her foe.

Waller.

HA'ZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturous; liable to chance.

An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indifferent effects, to affix a positive type or period.

Brown.

HA'ZARDER.† n. s. [from hazard, French, hasardeur.]

1. He who hazards.

2. A gamester. I find the word in our old writers, only in this sense. The preceding definition is Dr. Johnson's. In Huloet's old dictionary also, it has no other meaning than that of a gamester.

It is reprieve, and contrary of honour, For to ben holden a common hasardour.

Chaucer, Pardon. Tale.

The outrageous disers and hasarders.

Conful. of N. Shaxton, (1546.) sign. B. vi.

HA'ZARDRY.† n. s. [from hazard.]

1. Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

Hasty wrath, and heedless hazardry,

Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Gaming in general; playing at the game of hazard.

Now that I have spoke of glotonie,

Now wol I you defenden hasardrie:

Hasard is veray moder of lesinges,

And of deceit.

Chaucer, Pardon. Tale.

Some fell to daunce; some fell to hazardry;

Some to make love.

Spenser, F. Q.

HA'ZARDOUS. adj. [hazardeux, Fr. from hazard.] Dangerous; exposed to chance.

Grant that our hazardous attempt prove vain,
We feel the worst, secur'd from greater pain.

Dryden.

HA'ZARDOUSLY.† adv. [from hazardous.] With danger or chance.

Sherwood.

HAZE.† n. s. [The etymology unknown. Dr. Johnson. — One of the conjectures, made by Serenius, affords a probable etymon, viz. haes, Icel. a very small particle, of which a great number forms a cloud or mist.] Fog; mist.

In the fog and haze of confusion all is enlarged, and appears without any limit. Burke.

To HAZE.† v. n. To be foggy or misty. It hazes; it mingles, or rains small rain.

Ray, North Country Words.

To HAZE. v. a. To fright one. Ainsworth.
HA'ZEL. n. s. [hæzel, Saxon; corylus, Lat.] Nut tree.

The nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out. The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.

Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shaks.
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shakspeare.
Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.

There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward.

HA'ZEL. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

Chuse a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light hazel mould. Mortimer.

HA'ZELLY. adj. Of the colour of hazel; a light brown.

Uplands consist either of sand, gravel, chalk, rock or stone, hazelly loam, clay, or black mould. Mortimer.

HA'ZY. adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.

Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we see not far, and what we do see is in a bad light. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Of engender'd by the hazy North,
Myriads on myriads, insects armies waft. Thomson.

HE.† pronoun. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [hy, Dutch; hie, German; he, Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from ðir, of which the plural is ðar, dative ðirum.]

1. The man that was named before.
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar. Shakspeare.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and increase his passion;
Feed, and regard him not. Shakspeare.
I am weary of this moon; would he would change,
Adam spoke;
So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd. Milton, P. L.

When Adam wak'd, he on his side
Leaning had rais'd hung over her. Milton, P. L.
Thus talking, hand in hand along they pass'd
On to their blissful bow'rs. Milton, P. L.

Extol
Him first, him last, him midst. Milton, P. L.

2. The man; the person. It sometimes stands without reference to any foregoing word.
He is never poor
That little hath, but he that but desires. Daniel.

3. Man or male being.
Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
I stand to answer thee, or any he the proudest of thy sort. Shakspeare.
Tros and his race the sculptor shall employ,
And he the god who built the walls of Troy. Dryden.

4. Male: as, a he bear, a he goat. It is used where the male and female have not different denominations.
The he's in birds have the fairest feathers. Bacon.

5. In the two last senses he is rather a noun than pronoun.

6. According to the Saxon usage, he, in our old language, is prefixed to proper names emphatically; as, he Mozies, him Holofernes. Chaucer.

7. Formerly also he was frequently used for it, in all cases.

HEAD.† n. s. [heafob, hearb, Saxon; hoofd, Dutch; heved, old English, whence by contraction head. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius considers it as derived from the Icel. haed, height. But Mr. Tooke's etymon is heafob, the past participle of heapan, to heave; meaning that part (of the body, or any thing else,) which is heaved, raised, or lifted up, above the rest. Div. Purl. ii. 39.]

1. The part of the animal that contains the brain or the organ of sensation or thought.

Vein healing verven, and head purging dill. Spenser, F. Q.

Over head up-grew
Insufferable height of loftiest shade. Milton, P. L.

The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy head. Dryd.
I could still have offers, that some, who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept. Swift.

2. Person as exposed to any danger or penalty.

What he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspeare.
Who of all ages to succeed, but feeling
The evil on him brought by me, will curse
My head? ill fare our ancestor impure. Milton, P. L.

3. HEAD and Ears. The whole person. In colloquial language, over head and ears in debt is applied to a person greatly in debt.

You're over head and ears, ere you be aware. Beaumont and FL. Wit. at Sen. Weapons.
In jingling rhimes well fortify'd and strong,
He fights intrench'd o'er head and ears in song. Granville.

4. Denomination of any animals. [Here, perhaps, from the Sax. ebe, grex, a herd; hence to make head, to raise a body of forces.]

When Innocent desired the marquis of Carpio to furnish thirty thousand head of swine, he could not spare them; but thirty thousand lawyers he had at his service. Addison.

The tax upon pasturage was raised according to a certain rate per head upon cattle. Arbutnot.

5. Chief; principal person; one to whom the rest are subordinate; leader; commander.

For their commons, there is little danger from them, except it be where they have great and potent heads. Bacon.

Your head I him appoint;
And by myself have sworn, to him shall bow
All knees in heaven, and shall confess him Lord. Milton.

The heads of the chief sects of philosophy, as Thales, Anaxagoras, and Pythagoras, did consent to this tradition. Tillotson.

6. Place of honour; the first place.

Notwithstanding all the justices had taken their places upon the bench, they made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

7. Place of command.

An army of fourscore thousand troops, with the duke of Marlborough at the head of them, could do nothing. Addison on the War.

8. Countenance; presence.

Richard not far from hence hath hid his head. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day or light. Shaks.

Ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head. Dryden.

9. Understanding; faculties of the mind: commonly in a ludicrous sense.

The wenches laid their heads together. L'Est.
A fox and a goat went down a well to drink:
The goat fell to hunting which way to get back;
Oh, says Reynard, never trouble your head, but leave that to me. L'Estrange.

Work with all the ease and speed you can without breaking your head, and being so very industrious in starting scruples. Dryden.

The lazy and inconsiderate took up their notions by chance, without much beating their heads about them. Locke.

If a man shows that he has no religion, why should we think that he beats his head and troubles himself to examine the grounds of this or that doctrine? Locke.

When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; and when we say of a woman she has a fine head, we speak only in relation to her comode. Addison.

We laid our heads together, to consider what grievances the nation had suffered under king George. Addison.

10. Face; front; fore part.

The gathering crowd pursues;
The ravishers turn head, the fight renews. Dryd.

11. Resistance; hostile opposition. [Sax. ebe. See the fourth sense.]

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Hymner slew. Spenser, F. Q.
Sometimes hath Henry Bolingbroke made head against my power. Shakspeare.

Two valiant gentlemen making head against them, seconded by half a dozen more, made forty run away. Raleigh.

Sin having depraved his judgement, and got possession of his will, there is no other principle left him naturally, by which he can make head against it. South.

12. Spontaneous resolution.

The bordering wars in this kingdom were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head, without any pay or commission from the state. Davies.

13. State of a deer's horns, by which his age is known.

It was a buck of the first head. Shakspeare.
The buck is called the fifth year a buck of the first head. Shakspeare.

14. Individual. It is used in numbers or computation.

If there be six millions of people, then there is about four acres for every head. Graunt.

15. The top of any thing bigger than the rest.

His spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron. 1 Sam.

As high
As his proud head is rais'd towards the sky,
So low tow'ards hell his roots descend. Denham.
Trees, which have large and spreading heads, would lie with their branches up in the water. Woodward.

If the buds are made our food, they are called heads or tops; so heads of asparagus and artichokes. Watts.

Head is an equivocal term; for it signifies the head of a nail, or of a pin, as well as of an animal. Watts.

16. The fore part of any thing, as of a ship.

By galleys with brazen heads she might transport over Indus at once three hundred thousand soldiers. Raleigh.

His galleys moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

17. That which rises on the top.

Let it stand in a tub four or five days before it be put into the cask, stirring it twice a day, and beating down the head or yest into it. Mortimer.

18. The blade of an axe.

A man fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve. Deut. xix. 5.

19. Upper part of a bed.

Israel bowed upon the bed's head.
Gen. xlvii. 31.

20. The brain.

As eastern priests in giddy circles run,
And turn their heads to imitate the sun. Pope.

21. Dress of the head.

Ladies think they gain a point when they have teased their husbands to buy them a laced head, or a fine petticoat. Swift.

22. Principal topick of discourse.

These heads are of a mixed order, and we propose only such as belong to the natural world.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.
'Tis our great interest, and duty, to satisfy ourselves on this head, upon which our whole conduct depends. Atterbury.

23. Source of a stream.

It is the glory of God to give; his very nature delighteth in it: his mercies in the current, through which they would pass, may be dried up, but at the head they never fail. Hooker.

The current by Gaza is but a small stream, rising between it and the Red sea, whose head from Gaza is little more than twenty English miles. Raleigh, Hist.

Some did the song, and some the choir maintain,
Beneath a laurel shade, where mighty Po
Mounts up to woods above, and hides his head below. Dryden.

24. Crisis; pitch.

The indisposition which has long hung upon me, is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. Addison.

25. Power; influence; force; strength; dominion. [See the eleventh sense.]

Within her breast though calm, her breast though pure,
Motherly cares and fears got head, and rais'd
Some troubled thoughts. Milton, P. R.

26. Body; conflux. [Sax. ebe.]

People under command chuse to consult, and after to march in order; and rebels, contrariwise, run upon an head together in confusion. Bacon.

A mighty and a fearful head they are,
As ever off'd foul play in a state. Shakspeare.

Far in the marches here we heard you were,
Making another head to fight again. Shakspeare.

Let all this wicked crew gather
Their forces to one head. B. Jonson.

27. Power; armed force. [Sax. ebe.]

My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head.
Shakspeare.

At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he sought
Beyond the mark of others. Shakspeare.

28. Liberty in running a horse.

He gave his able horse the head,
And bounding forward, struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowl-head. Shakspeare.

29. Licence; freedom from restraint; a metaphor from horsemanship.

God will not admit of the passionate man's apology, that he has so long given his unruly passions their head, that he cannot now govern nor controul them. South.

30. It is very improperly applied to roots.

How turneps hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

31. HEAD and Shoulders. By force; violently.

People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by head and shoulders, over and over, in several companies. L'Estrange.

They bring in every figure of speech, head and shoulders by main force, in spite of nature and their subject. Felton.

- HEAD. adj. Chief; principal: as, the head workman: the head inn.

The horse made their escape to Winchester, the head quarters. Clarendon.

- To HEAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lead; to influence; to direct; to govern.

Abas, who seem'd our friend, is either fled,
Or, what we fear, our enemies does head. Dryden.
Nor is what has been said of princes less true of all other governors, from him that heads an army to him that is master of a family, or of one single servant. South.

This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to his king's commands. Prior.

2. To behead; to kill by taking away the head.

If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. Shakspeare.

3. To fit any thing with a head, or principal part.

Headed with flints and feathers bloody dy'd,
Arrows the Indians in their quivers hide. Spenser, F. Q.

Of cornel-wood a spear upright,
Headed with piercing steel, and polish'd bright. Dryden.

4. To lop trees.

You must disbranch them, leaving only the summit entire: it may be necessary to head them too. Mortimer.

- HE'ADACH. n. s. [head and ach.] Pain in the head.

From the cruel headach,
Riches do not preserve. Sidney.
Nothing more exposes to headachs, colds, catarrhs, and coughs, than keeping the head warm. Locke.

In the headach he orders the opening of the vein of the forehead. Arbutnot.

At some dear idle time,
Not plagu'd with headachs, or the want of rhyme. Pope.

The Lord will take away the bonnets and the headbands. Isaiah.

2. The band at each end of a book.

- HE'ADBOROUGH. n. s. [head and borough.] A constable; a subordinate constable.

Here lies John Dod, a servant of God, to whom he is gone,
Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;

A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name. Camden.

This none are able to break thorough,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Hudibras.

- HE'ADDRESS. n. s. [head and dress.]

1. The covering of a woman's head.

There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall above thirty degrees. Addison, Spect. No. 98.

If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the headdress of a prude. Pope.

2. Any thing resembling a headdress, and prominent on the head.

Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful headdress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison.

- HE'ADED.* adj. [from head.]

1. Having a head or top.

Embossed sores, and headed evils. Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. Much used in composition; as, clear-headed, having a clear head, long-headed, and the like.

The mother cow must wear a louring look,
Sour-headed, strongly neck'd to bear the yoke. Dryden, Georg.

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.

2. One who heads a mob or party.

3. The first brick in the angle.

If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the header on the outside, it would be a stronger stretching, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Mozon.

- HE'ADGARGLE. n. s. [head and gargle.]

A disease, I suppose, in cattle.

For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek. Mortimer.

- HE'ADGEAR.* n. s. [head and gear.] The dress of a woman's head.

Those glittering attires, counterfeit colours, headgears, curled hairs, &c. wherewith our countrywomen counterfeit a beauty. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

- HE'ADILY.* adv. [from heady.] Hastily; rashly; so as not to be governed.

What strange fury possesseth the minds of ignorant, unstable men, that they should thus headily desire and sue to shake off so sacred and well-grounded an institution?

Remonstrance to Parliament, (1640,) p. 22.
Deliberately to move to any business, is proper to man: headily to be carried by desire, is common to beasts.

Bp. Henshaw's Daily Thoughts, (1651,) p. 65.

- HE'ADINESS. n. s. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.

If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardness in condemning.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

- HE'ADLAND. n. s. [head and land.]

1. Promontory; cape.

An herack play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps, with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.

Now down with the grass upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout.

Tusser.

HE'ADLESS.† adj. [Sax. heapoblear.]

1. Without an head; beheaded.

His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlance,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place.

Spenser, F. Q.

Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks.

Shakespeare.

Of mermaids that the southern seas do haunt,
Of headless men, of savage cannibals.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denh.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;

Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.

They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh.

3. Without foundation.

[He] calleth it a rumour, which is an headless tale. Bacon, Charge in the Star-Chamber.

It may more justly be numbered among those headless old-wives' tales, which Plutarch so justly derideth. Fotherby, Athom. p. 62.

4. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects; perhaps for headless.

Him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of head- less hardness in condemning.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

HE'ADLONG.† adj.

1. Steep; precipitous.

Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head
From thy coral-paven bed;
And bridle in thy headlong wave,
Till thou our summons answer'd have.

Milton, Comus.

2. Rash; thoughtless.

3. Sudden; precipitate.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which,
many examples having taught them, never stoop his race till it came to a headlong overthrow.

Sidney.

HE'ADLONG. adv. [head and long.]

1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.

I'll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topples down headlong. Shakespeare.
Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore

His course from Africk to the Latian shore,
Fell headlong down. Dryden.
Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings.

Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.

To give Ahab such warning, as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was esteemed by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good.

South.

Some ask for envy'd pow'r, which publick hate
Pursues and hurries headlong to their fate;
Down go the titles. Dryden.

3. Hastily; without delay or respite.

Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!
Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb.

Dryden.

4. It is very negligently used by Shakspeare.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels,
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shaks.

HE'ADMAN.* n. s. [Sax. heapobman, a principal person, a governor.] A chief;

as, "the headman of a city, town, or country; the headman of a jury."

Huloet.

HE'ADMONEY.* n. s. [head and money.]
A capitation tax.

To be taxed by the pole, to be sconded our head- money. Milton, Of Ref. in Engl. B. 2.

HE'ADMOULD-SHOT. n. s. [head, mould, and shot.] This is when the sutures of the skull, generally the coronal, ride; that is, have their edges shot over one another; which is frequent in infants, and occasions convulsions and death.

Quincy.

HE'ADPAN.* n. s. [Sax. heapobpann.] The brainpan.

HE'ADPEACE. n. s. [Sax. heapþenninc.] A kind of poll-tax formerly collected in the county of Northumberland.

HE'ADPIECE. n. s. [head and piece.]

1. Armour for the head; helmet; morion.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly intreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel.

Sidney.

The word is given; with eager speed they lace
The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace.

Dryden.

A reason for this fiction of the one-eyed Cyclops, was their wearing a head-piece, or martial vizor,
that had but one sight. Broome.

This champion will not come into the field, before his great blunderbus can be got ready, his old rusty breastplate scoured, and his cracked head- piece mended. Swift.

2. Understanding; force of mind.

'Tis done by some severals

Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shaks.
Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains. Prideaux.

HEADQUARTERS. n. s. [head and quarters.]

The place of general rendezvous, or lodgement for soldiers. This is properly two words.

Those spirits, posted upon the out-guards, immediately scour off to the brain, which is the headquarters, or office of intelligence, and there they make their report. Collier.

HEADSHAKE.* n. s. [head and shake.] A significant shake of the head.

You, at such times seeing me, never shall,
With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,
Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

— note

That you know aught of me. Shaks. Hamlet.

HE'ADSHIP.† n. s. [from head.] Dignity;
authority; chief place.

Not the plotting for an headship, (for that is now become a court-business), but the contriving of a bursarship of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 276.

That the followers should be bound to each other as well as to the chief; that this headship was not at first hereditary.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

HE'ADSMAN. n. s. [head and man.] Executioner; one that cuts off heads.

Rods broke on our associates' bleeding backs,
And headsmen labouring till they blunt their ax.

Dryden.

HE'ADSPRING.* n. s. [head and spring.]
Fountain; origin.

That see is the headspring of our belief.
Stapleton, Fortif. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 149. b.

HE'ADSTALL. n. s. [head and stall.] Part of the bridle that covers the head.

His horse, with a half-check'd bit, and a head- stall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, had been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakespeare.

HE'ADSTONE.† n. s. [head and stone.]

1. The first or capital stone.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Psaln cxviii. 24.

2. A grave-stone; so called in many places.

HE'ADSTRONG. adj. [head and strong.]

Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable;
resolute to run his own way: as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom. Hooker.

How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

— Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.
But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof. Shaks. Tw. Night.

He ill aspires to rule

Cities of men or headstrong multitudes,
Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton.

There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude. L'Estrange.

Now let the headstrong boy my will controul:
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:
I, for myself, the imperial seat will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign.

Dryden.

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force.

Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
Defy'd thy prince to arms, nor made account
Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Phillips.
I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addison.

You will be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour.
Arbutnot.

HE'ADSTRONGNESS.* n. s. [from head- strong.] Obstnacy; like that of a horse, whose head cannot be held in, or which will not be guided.

Rosinante's headstrongness is here remarkable,
and shews that a beast knows when he is weary,
or hungry, better than his rider.

Gayton on Don Quix. p. 6.

HE'ADTIRE.* n. s. [head and tire.] Attire for the head.

An headtire of fine linen, and a chain about his neck. 1 Esdr. iii. 6.

He nameth divers strange forms of apparel, as their headtire, slops, headbands, and such like.
A. Willet, Treat. of Sol. Marr. &c. (1612,) p. 46.

HE'ADWAY.* n. s. [head and way.] In naval language, the motion of advancing at sea.

HEADWORKMAN. n. s. [head, work, and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest. Properly two words.

Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick, the headworkman, to prepare furnace and stamps? Swift.

HE'ADY.† adj. [from head.]

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villany. Shakespeare.

I am advis'd what I say :
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire ;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
Shakespeare.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakespeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy. B. Jonson.
Those who are regarded who are true to their party ; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or other.

Temple.
Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature. Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.
I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seemed to be sack. Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julep-dance, ptisan of song and show ;
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady ;
You're come to farce, that's asses' milk, already.
Dryden.

Flow, Welsted ! flow, like thine inspirer, beer ;
Heady, not strong ; and, foaming, though not full.
Pope.

3. Violent ; impetuous.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scouring faults ;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat. Shakespeare.
Thou clay'st the rock, from whose green wound
The thirst-exPELLING fountain brake :
Thou mad'st the heady streams forsake
Their channels, and become dry ground.
Sandys, Ps. 74.

To HEAL.† v. a. [halgan, Gothick ; hælan,
Saxon ; heelen, Dutch ; from the Su.
Goth. hel, whole.]

1. To cure a person ; to restore from hurt or sickness.
I will restore health, and heal thee of thy wounds.
Jer. xxx.

Who would not believe that our Saviour healed
the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did the same miracles ? Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to an honourable degree of skill in the art of healing.
Watts.

2. To restore any thing from an unsound to a sound state.

He went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus said the Lord, I have healed these waters ; there shall not be from thence any more death. 2 Kings, ii. 21.

May be he is not well ;
Infirmy doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound. Shakespeare.

2. Welfare of mind ; purity ; goodness ;
principle of salvation.

There is no health in us. Common Prayer.
The best preservative to keep the mind in health,
is the faithful admonition of a friend. Bacon.

3. Salvation spiritual and temporal.

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me,
and art so far from my health, and from the words of my complaint ? Psalms.

4. Wish of happiness used in drinking.
Come, love and health to all ;
I drink to the general joy of the whole table.
Shakespeare.

He asked leave to begin two healths : the first was to the king's mistress, and the second to his wife. Hovell.

For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health. Dryd.

HEALTHFUL. adj. [health and full.]

1. Free from sickness.

Adam knew no disease, so long as temperance from the forbidden fruit secured him : Nature was his physician, and innocence and abstinence would have kept him healthful to immortality. South.

2. Well disposed.

Such an exploit have I in hand,
Had you an healthful ear to hear it. Shakespeare.

3. Wholesome ; salubrious.

Many good and healthful airs do appear by habitation and proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon.

They pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness ; worthily, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves.
Milton, P. L.

Our healthful food the stomach labours thus,
At first embracing what it straight doth crush.
Dryden.

4. Salutary ; productive of salvation.

Pour upon them the healthful spirit of thy grace.
Common Prayer.

HEALTHFULLY.† adv. [from healthful.]

1. In health.

If it be so, that neither for fear nor love thou wilt part with thy goods, yet part with thy prayers for thy king ; that he may healthfully, happily, and victoriously reign.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 123.

2. Wholesomely.

If merit be disease ; if virtue, death ;
To be good, not to be ; who'd then bequeath
Himself to discipline ? who'd not esteem
Labour a crime ? study self-murder deem ?
Our noble youth now have pretence to be Dunces securely, ignorant healthfully.
Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

HEALTHFULNESS.† n. s. [from healthful.]

1. State of being well.

This verse sets forth the healthfulness and vigour of the inhabitants of that fertile country.

Patrick on Gen. xlix. 12.

2. Wholesomeness ; salubrious qualities.

You have tasted of that cup whereof I have liberally drank, which I look upon as God's physick, having that in healthfulness which it wants in pleasure. King Charles.

We ventured to make a standard of the healthfulness of the air from the proportion of acute and epidemic diseases. Graunt.

To the winds the inhabitants of Geneva ascribe
the healthfulness of their air ; for as the Alps surround them on all sides, there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind put them in motion. Addison on Italy.

HEALTHILY.† adv. [from healthy.] Without sickness or pain. Sherwood.

HEALTHINESS. n. s. [from healthy.] The state of health.

HEALTHLESS.† adj. [from health.]

The leaves, that whilom were so fresh and greene,
In healthlesse autumn to the ground do fall.

Mir. for Mag. p. 563.

2. Not conducive to health.

He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose garment is all made of fringes, and his meat nothing but sauces ; they are healthless, chargeable, and useless. Bp. Taylor.

HEALTHSOME. adj. [from health.] Wholesome ; salutary. Not now used.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there be strangled ere my Romeo comes ?
Shakespeare.

HEALTHY. adj. [from health.]

1. Enjoying health ; free from sickness ;
hale ; sound.

The husbandman returns from the field, and from manuring his ground, strong and healthy, because innocent and laborious. South.

Temperance, industry, and a publick spirit, running through the whole body of the people in Holland, hath preserved an infant commonwealth, of a sickly constitution, through so many dangers,
as a much more healthy one-could never have struggled against without those advantages. Swift.

Air and exercise contribute to make the animal healthy. Arbuthnot.

2. Conducive to health ; wholesome.

Gardening or husbandry, and working in wood, are fit and healthy recreations for a man of study or business. Locke.

For those of old,
 And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
 We rest your hermits. Shakspeare.

HE'APER.† n. s. [from heap.] One that makes piles or heaps. Sherwood.

HE'APLY.* adv. [from heap.] In heaps; without order. Obsolete. Hulock.

HE'APY.† adj. [from heap.] Lying in heaps.

Old Ocean lifts his heapy waves on high.

Where a dim gleam the paly lantern throws.
 O'er the mid pavement, heapy rubbish grows. Gay.

Scarce his head
 Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
 Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss. Thoms.
 Nor can Freewill find a place for the sole of her foot among the heapy ruins, wherewith he bestrewn the ground.

Search, Freewill, Foreknowledge, & Fate, p. 188.

To HEAR.† v. n. [Sax. hepan, heopan, hýpan; Icel. heyren; Dutch, hooren. See EAR.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflections of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes, nor hear with their own ears. Temple.

2. To listen; to hearken to: as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam heard,
 Well-pleas'd, but answer'd not. Milton, P. L.

3. To be told; to have an account: with of.

I have heard by many of this man. Acts, ix. 18.
Hear of such a crime
 As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
 Ne'er feign'd. Tate, Jew.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

To HEAR.† v. a.

1. To perceive by the ear.

The trumpeters and singers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord. 2 Chron. v. 13.
 And sure he heard me, but he would not hear. Dryden.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.

He sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. Acts, xxiv. 24.

I must beg the forbearance of censure, till I have been heard out in the sequel of this discourse. Locke.

3. To attend; to listen to; to obey.

A scorner heaveth not rebuke. Proverbs.
Hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. Ezek. iii. 17.

To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Hebrews.

Neptune for human good the beast ordains,
 Whom soon he tam'd to use, and taught to hear the reins. Congreve, Ode to Ld. Godolphin.

The trembling steed,
 With his hot impulse seiz'd in ev'ry nerve,
 Nor hears the rein, nor heeds the sounding throng. Thomson, Spring.

4. To attend favourably.

They think they shall be heard for their much speaking. St. Matthew.

Since 'tis your command, what you so well
 Are pleas'd to hear, I cannot grieve to tell. Denham.

5. To try; to attend judicially.

Hear the causes, and judge righteously. Deut. i. 16.

6. To attend, as to one speaking.

On earth
 Who against faith or conscience can be heard Infallible? Milton.

7. To acknowledge a title; to be spoken of. A Latin phrase.

O! what of gods then boots it to be born,
 If old Aveng'e's sons so evil hear? Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 23.

Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,
 Whose fountain who shall tell? Milton, P. L.
Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth? Prior.

8. To HEAR Say. An elliptical expression for to hear a thing said.

A people great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou know'st, and of whom thou hast heard say, who can stand before the children of Anak! Deut. ix. 2.

If thou shalt hear say in one of thy cities, saying, Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you—then shalt thou enquire.
Deut. xiii. 12.

9. To HEAR a bird sing. A kind of proverbial expression; implying the receipt of a very particular or private communication.

I hear a bird sing in mine ear,
 That I must either fight or flee.

Old Ballad of the Rising in the North.

I will lay odds, that, ere this year expire,
 We bear our civil swords, and native fire,
 As far as France; I heard a bird so sing.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

1 King. Did you observe their whispers, brother king?
 2 King. I did; and heard, besides, a grave bird sing,

That they intend, sweetheart, to play us pranks!
D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as heardbearht, a glorious keeper; sometimes final, as cyneheard, a royal keeper. Gibson's Camden. It is now written herd: as, cowherd, a cow-keeper; hýp, Sax.

HEARD.* } n. s. A keeper of herds.
HE'ARDGROOM. } See HERD and HEARDGROOM.

HE'ARER. n. s. [from hear.]

1. One who hears.

And so was she dulled withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Sidney.

St. John and St. Matthew, which have recorded these sermons, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees. Hooker.

Words, be they never so few, are too many,
 when they benefit not the hearer. Hooker.

The hearers will shed tears,
 And say, Alas! it was a piteous deed! Shaksp.
 Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
 And send the hearers weeping to their beds. Shakspeare.

2. One who attends to doctrine or discourse orally delivered by another; as, the hearers of the gospel.

3. One of a collected audience.

Plays in themselves have neither hopes nor fears;
 Their fate is only in their hearers' ears. B. Jonson.

Her hearers had no share
 In all she spoke, except to stare. Swift.

HE'ARING.† n. s. [from hear.]

1. The sense by which sounds are perceived.

Bees are called with sound upon brass, and therefore they have hearing. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
 Aged ears play truant at his tales,
 And younger hearings are quite ravished;
 So sweet and voluble is his discourse. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

2. Audience.

The French ambassador upon that instant
 Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come
 To give him hearing. Shakspeare.

3. Judicial trial.

Agrippa and Bernice—entered into the place of hearing. Acts, xxv. 23.

The readers are the jury to decide according to the merits of the cause, or to bring it to another hearing before some other court. Dryden.

Those of different principles may be betrayed to give you a fair hearing, and to know what you have to say for yourself. Addison.

4. Note by the ear; reach of the ear.

If we profess, as Peter did, that we love the Lord, and profess it in the hearing of men; charity is prone to hear all things, and therefore charitable men are likely to think we do so.

Hooker.

In our hearing the king charged thee, beware that none touch Absalom. 2 Sam. xviii. 12.

You have been talked of since your travels much, And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality Wherein they say you shine.

Shakespeare.

The fox had the good luck to be within hearing. L'Estrange.

To HE'ARKEN.† v. n. [heoprcman, Sax.; harken, Fris.]

1. To listen; to listen eagerly or curiously. The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for, Her father keeps from all access of suitors.

Shakespeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams.

Shakespeare.

They do me too much injury,

That ever said I hearken'd for your death:

If it were so, I might have let alone

The insulting hand of Douglas over you. Shaks.

The gaping three-mouth'd dog forgets to snarl;

The furies hearken, and their snakes uncurl.

Dryden.

He who makes much necessary, will want much; and, wearied with the difficulty of the attainment, will hearken after any expedient that offers to shorten his way to it.

Rogers.

2. To attend; to pay regard.

Hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor.

Numbers, xxiii. 18.

Those who put passion in the place of reason, neither use their own, nor hearken to other people's reason, any farther than it suits their humour.

Locke.

There's not a blessing individuals find, But some way leans and hearkens to the kind.

Pope.

To HE'ARKEN.* v. a.

1. To hear by listening.

She past into his dreadful den,

Where nought but darkest dreariness she found, Ne creature saw, but hearkened now and then Some little whispering, and soft-groaning sound.

Spenser, F. Q.

But here she comes; I fairly step aside, And hearken, if I may, her business here.

Milton, Comus.

2. To hear with attention; to regard.

When Thelamon hearkened had his tale. Lydgate.

The king of Naples, being an enemy

To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit.

The warlike damsel was empassioned sore.

Spenser, F. Q.

HE'ARSAY. n. s. [hear and say.] Report; rumour; what is not known otherwise than by account from others.

For prey these shepherds two he took,

Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend

With hearsay pictures, or a window look. Sidney.

He affirms by hearsay, that some giants saved themselves upon the mountain Baris in Armenia.

Raleigh, Hist.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, publish every blot in his life, and depend upon hearsay to defame him.

Addison.

HEARSE.† n. s. [of unknown etymology, Dr. Johnson says; yet, under the other form of writing the word, viz. herse, he cites the low Lat. herisia, "supposed to come from the Sax. heprian, to praise."]

—Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the Sax. hýprian, to adorn, to decorate. Div. Parl. ii. 323. — Sere-nius derives it from the Goth. herisa, a sepulchral mount or hill. — The low Lat. herisia, or hercia, is said to have been a kind of candlestick, in the form of a harrow, (old Fr. herce), having branches filled with lights, and being placed at the head of graves or cenotaphs; and hence hearse came to be used for the grave, and for the coffin, or chest containing the dead.]

1. A temporary monument set over a grave; according to Hulot, as well as Dr. Johnson. The solemn obsequy at funerals; according to E. K. the contemporary commentator on Spenser.

A cenotaph is an empty funeral monument or tombe, erected for the honour of the dead; in imitation of which our hearses here in England are set up in churches, during the continuance of a year, or the space of certain months.

Weever.

So many torches, so many tapers, so many black gowns, so many merry mourners laughing under black hodes, and a gay herse.

Sir T. More, De Quat. Nov.

The gaudy girlonds deck her grave,

The faded flowres her corse embrace.

O heavie herse!

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

2. The place, or the case, in which a dead corse is deposited.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palm-tree grows,

Ennobled since by this great funeral,

Where Duden's corpse they softly laid in ground.

Fairfax, Tass.

To add to your laments,

Wherewith ye now bedew king Henry's hearse,

I must inform you of a dismal fight.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

These poor and fruitless drops,

Which willingly would fall upon his hearse,

To embalm him twice.

Beaumont, and Fl. Coronation.

3. A carriage in which the dead are conveyed to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis'

herse,

Who does not weep that reads the moving verse?

Roscommon.

To HEARSE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose in a hearse, or coffin.

Tell,

Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,

Have burst their cerements? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I would my daughter were dead at my feet, and the jewels in her ear. O! would she were hearsed at my feet, and the ducats in her coffin.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

HE'ARSECLOTH.* n. s. [hearse and cloth.]

A covering thrown over the hearse, or coffin; a pall.

Without any blacks to be hung any where in or about the church, other than a pulpit-cloth, a hearse-cloth, and a mourning gown for the preacher. Bp. Sanderson's Will, in Walton's Lives.

HE'ARSELIKE. adj. [hearse and like.]

Mournful; suitable to a funeral.

If you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols.

Bacon, Essay of Adversity.

HEART.† n. s. [Sax. heopt; Germ.

hertz; Goth. hiarto; Icel. hiarta; "ab ant. hyra, hurra, horfa, movere, agitare." Serenius.—"The heart, in the Teutonic languages,—should probably be referred to the Gr. καρδια, in which the rough breathing of the h is hardened into a consonant. Junius has been aware of this connexion." Whiter.]

1. The muscle which by its contraction and dilatation propels the blood through the course of circulation, and is therefore considered as the source of vital motion.

The heart gives heat, and motion, and life, unto that which is to be our nourishment.

Smith on Old Age, p. 230.

2. It is supposed in popular language to be the seat sometimes of courage, sometimes of affection, sometimes of honesty, or baseness.

He with providence and courage so passed over all, that the mother took such spiteful grief at it, that her heart brake withal, and she died.

Sidney.

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Shakespeare.

Snakes in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting

my heart.

Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms,

Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;

Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.

Shakespeare.

I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.

—Master Page, much good do it your good heart.

Shakespeare.

But since the brain doth lodge the powers of sense,

How makes it in the heart those passions spring?

The mutual love, the kind intelligence

'Twixt heart and brain, this sympathy doth bring.

Davies.

We all set our hearts at rest, since whatever comes from above is for the best.

The only true zeal is that which is guided by a good light in the head, and that which consists of good and innocent affections in the heart.

Prest with heart corroding grief and years,

To the gay court a rural shed prefers.

Pope.

3. The chief part; the vital part; the vigorous or efficacious part.

HEAT.† n. s. [heat, hæc, Saxon; heete,

Danish. Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Saxon hætan, to make warm. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal,

as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Mozon.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,

And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines on golden anvil beat,

Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;

But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

9. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats

in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion;

vehement of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to discover them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst

By those that feel their sharpness. Shakspeare.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakspeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden.

Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Addison, Cato.
To HEAT.† v. a. [Sax. hætan.]

1. To make hot; to endure with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heat.
Dan. iii. 19.

2. To cause to ferment.
Hops lying undried heats them, and changes their colour. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To make the constitution feverish.
Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.
— Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

Shakspeare.
Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest.

Dryden.
5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well heated, the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour.

Dryden.

HEAT.* part. adj. [hot, says Mr. H. Tooke, as a participle, is sufficiently common;
heat is rarely so used; and he accordingly cites a solitary instance from Ben Jonson. Heat, however, was formerly sufficiently common also as a participle, and stands in the present version of our Bible, though Dr. Johnson, in his first citation to illustrate the verb heat, has unwarrantably printed the word heated.
Chaucer uses het as the pret. of the verb:
"One me het, the other did me cold."
Ass. of Fowls, ver. 145.] Heated.

Nebuchadnezzar—commanded, that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heat. Dan. iii. 19.

As a herdess in a summer's day,
Heat with the glorious sun's all-purging ray,
In the calm evening leaving her fair flock.

Browne, Brit. Past.
And fury ever boils more high and strong,
Heat with ambition, than revenge of wrong.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

HE'ATER. n. s. [from heat.] An iron smoad hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooth and plait linen.

HE'ATFUL.* adj. [heat and full.] Full of warmth.

The wild fen-goose keeps warm her eggs,
With her broad feet, under her heatful legs.
Sylvester, Du Bart. (1621), p. 450.

HEATH.† n. s. [Goth. hæithjo, a field;
Icel. heide, a wood; Germ. heide, a solitary place, and also the shrub, viz. the Lat. erica.]

small, and abide green all the year.

Miller.
In Kent they cut up the heath in May, burn it,
and spread the ashes. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Off with bolder wing they soaring dare
The purple heath. Thomson.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting?

Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Health and long life have been found rather on the peak of Derbyshire, and the heaths of Staffordshire, than fertile soils. Temple.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary,
will smell a great way into the sea. Dacon.

large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, heathcock, and poutie. Carew, Survey.

HEATH-POUT. n. s. [heath and pout.] A bird.

Not heath-pout, or the rarer bird
Which Phasis or Ionia yields,
More pleasing morsels would afford
Than the fat olives of my fields. Dryden.

HEATH-PEAS. n. s. A species of bitter
Vetch, which see.

HEATH-ROSE. n. s. [heath and rose.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HE'ATHEN.† n. s. [Goth. hæithn; Sax.
hæþen. "Πᾶντα τὰ ἔθνη, not all nations, but all the heathen, (the word heathen comes from ἔθνη,) all the Gentiles distinguished from the Jews, as the same words are translated Rom. xv. 11." Bentley, Confut. of Atheism, Sermon vi. — Stillfleet notices a derivation of the word from the Germ. heyden, "heathy ground, where men worshipped the trees." Ecc. Cases, P. ii. p. 474.] The Gentiles; the Pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name. 1 Chron. xvi. 35.
If the opinions of others, whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be heathens in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England. Locke.
In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient heathens.

Addison.

HE'ATHEN. adj. Gentile; Pagan.

It was impossible for a heathen author to relate these things, because, if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a heathen. Addison.

HEATHENISH. adj. [from heathen.]

1. Belonging to the Gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, chosen they were, St. Paul excepted; the rest unschooled altogether, and unlettered men.

To HEAVE.† v. a. pret. heaved, anciently hove; part. heaved, or hoven. [Sax.
heapan, hepan, pret. hof; Goth. haffjan;
Icel. hefa; "ab antiquiss. Scyth. ha, high." Serenius.]

1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-fiend lay,

Chain'd on the burning lake; nor ever thence
Had risen, or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling Heaven

Left him at large. Milton, P. L.

2. To carry.

Now we hear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; and there being seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakspeare.

3. To raise; to lift.

So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heav'd up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite.

Spenser, F. Q.

I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth. Shakspeare.

He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in consort fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound.

Dryden.

4. To cause to swell.

The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and stick half way.

Dryden.

The glittering finny swarms,
That heave our frits and croud upon our shores.

Thomson.

5. To force up from the breast.

Made she no verbal quest?
— Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Poor shadow, painted queen;
One heav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below.

Shakspeare.

7. To puff; to elate.

The Scots, heav'd up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain.

Hayward.

To HEAVE. v. n.

1. To pant; to breathe with pain.

He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side.

Dryden.

2. To labour.

The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days.

Atterbury.

3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.

Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles.

Dryden.

The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart.

Dryden.

Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves.

Prior.

The heaving tide

In widen'd circles beats on either side.

Gay, Trivia.

4. To keck; to feel a tendency to vomit.

1. Lift; exertion or effort upwards.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the first foundation, or swallow them.

Dryden.

2. Rising of the breast.

There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.

Shakespeare.

3. Effort to vomit.

4. Struggle to rise.

But after many strains and heaves,

He got up to his saddle eaves.

Hudibras.

HEAVE Offering. n. s. An offering among the Jews.

Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor.

Numb.

HE'AVEN.† n. s. [heopon, which seems to be derived from heop, the places over head, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Heaven signifies that which is raised high, or heaved up. Thus Serenius refers it to the verbs haffjan, and hefta, to heave or lift up. See To HEAVE. And thus Mr. H. Tooke and Mr. Whiter refer it to the Sax. heapan. An ingenious writer deduces the Saxon from the Hebrew she-aphon, or leaving out the s or hiss, he-aphon, that is to say, the round orb of air which is above our heads: from which idea the Latins took their word cælum. See A Commentary on the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, by S. Harris, D.D. 1739, p. 204.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.

A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Shakespeare.

Thy race in time to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

Dryden.

The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens.

Raleigh, Hist.

This act, with shouts heaven high, the friendly band

Applaud.

Dryden.

Some fires may fall from heaven.

Temple.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.

It is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

These, the late

Heaven-banish'd host, left desert utmost hell.

Milton, P. L.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heaven-fallen, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation.

Milton, P. L.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.

Now Heaven help him!

Shakespeare.

The will

And high permission of all-ruling Heaven

Left him at large.

Milton, P. L.

The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by Heaven.

Temple.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.

Take physick, pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.

Shaks. K. Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Heavens! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!

How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow.

Dryden.

5. Elevation; sublimity.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heavens of invention.

Shakespeare.

6. It is often used in composition.

It was the winter wild,

While the heaven-born child

All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

Depressing the high and heaven-born spirit of man far beneath the condition wherein either God created him, or sin hath sunk him.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Introd.

If once a fever fires his sulphurous blood,

In ev'ry fit he feels the hand of God,

And heaven-born flame.

Dryden, Juv.

Oh heaven-born sisters! I source of art!

Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;

Who lead fair virtue's train along,

Moral truth, and mystic song!

Pope.

HEAVEN-BRED. adj. Produced or cultivated in heaven.

Much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Shakespeare.

HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.

His arms had wrought the destin'd fall

Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall.

Pope.

HEAVEN-DIRECTED.† adj.

1. Raised towards the sky.

Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise?

Pope.

2. Taught by the powers of heaven.

O sacred weapon; left for truth's defence;
To all but a heaven-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide.

Pope.

These passages are to be found only in St. John's Gospel; and whoever reads them with attention will discover in them plain indications not only of a heaven-directed hand, but of a feeling and grateful heart.

Dp. Porteus, Serm. i. xviii.

HEAVEN-FALLEN.* adj. Fallen from heaven. See Milton in the second definition of HEAVEN.HEAVEN-GIFTED.* adj. Bestowed by Heaven.

To grind in brazen fetters under task

With this Heaven-gifted strength.

But oh! why didst thou not stay here below

To bless us with thy heaven-lov'd innocence.

Milton on the Death of a Fair Infant.

Such was this heaven-lov'd isle,

Than Lesbos fairer, and the Cretan shore.

Sir W. Jones, Ode.

HE'AVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly.

Sidney.

Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Not Pindar's heavenly lyre, nor Horace when a swan.

Dryden.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.

Adorning first the genius of the place,

Then earth, the mother of the heavenly race.

Dryden.

HE'AVENLY. adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,

Where heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,

And ever-musing melancholy reigns,

What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.

Truth and peace and love shall ever shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, to whose happy-making sight alone,

Our heavenly guided soul shall climb.

Milton, Ode on Time.

HEAVENLY-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. A state of mind abstracted from the world, and directed to heaven.

The danger of being all soul, all holiness, all heavenly-mindedness so early, is a sad frightful thing for a young courtier!

Hammond, Works, iv. 515.
With how much more difficulty may we imagine a man to get humility, or heavenly-mindedness, while all the appetites, and the very nerves of his soul strive against it, and endeavour to pull down as fast as he can build up. South, Sermon, vii. 54.

HEAVEN-SALUTING.* adj. Touching the sky; heaven-kissing.

What shall they do,
When stubborn rocks shall bow,
And hills hang down to heaven-saluting heads.
Crashaw, Poems, p. 153.

HEAVENWARD.† adv. [heaven and peap, Saxon.] Towards heaven.

Out of the west coast, a wenche as me thought
Come walking in the way; to heavenward she looked;
Mercy hight that mayde. Vis. of P. Ploughman.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heavenward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke.

Prior.

HEAVEN-WARRING.* adj. Warring against heaven.

None among the choice and prime
Of those heaven-warring champions could be found
So hardy, as to proffer or accept Alone the dreadful voyage. Millon, P. L.

The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.

2. Depression of mind; depression of spirit.

We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind. Hooker.
Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakespeare.
Let us not burthen our remembrance with
An heaviness that's gone. Shakespeare.
Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop;
but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.
Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye be in heaviness, through manifold temptations.

1 Pet. i. 6.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness; dulness of spirit;
languidness; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakespeare.

This lethargy that creeps through all my senses?
Addison.

He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction: as, the heaviness of taxes.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbutnot on Coins.

HE'AVING.* n. s. [from heave.]

1. A pant; a motion of the heart.
'Tis such as you,—
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shaks. W. Tale.

2. A swell.
Of all objects that I have ever seen, there is none which affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean. I cannot see the heavings of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Addison, Spect. No. 489.

HE'AVISOME.* adj. [from heavy.] Dark;
dull; drowsy. Craven Dialect.

And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shaks.

9. Stupid; foolish.
This heavy headed revel, East and West
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakespeare.

I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Knolles.

10. Burthensome; troublesome; tedious.

I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke, Ep. to the Reader.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Loaded; encumbered; burthened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon, Hen. VII.

12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arbutnot.

Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss. and Craven
Dialect. Grose notices with Mr. Wil-braham also the verb heaz, as a northern word, in the sense of to hawk or cough.

HE'BDOMAD.† n. s. [hebdomas, Latin.]
A week; a space of seven days.

Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.

Those of creation being concluded within the first hebdomade. Glaville, Pre-er. of Souls, ch. 2.

HEBDO'MADAL.† adj. [from hebdomada, HEBDO'MADARY. Latin.] Weekly; consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.

They had their original of later time than this hebdomadal account. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

HEBDO'MADARY.* n. s. [hebdomadarius, low Lat.] A member of a chapter or convent, whose week it was to officiate in the cathedral. Obsolete.

HEBDOMA'TICAL.* adj. [ἑβδοματός, Gr.] Weekly.

Far from the conceit of a deambulatory, hebdomadical, or peradventure, ephemeral, office.

Bp. Morton, Episcop. Asserted, p. 142.

HE'BEN.* n. s. [Fr. hebene; "heben, or ebony." Cotgrave.] Ebony.

A gentle youth, his dearly loved spouse, His spear of heben wood behind him bare.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 37.

TO HE'BETATE. v. a. [hebetō, Latin; hebetor, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey on Consumptions.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arbutnot and Pope.

HEBETA'TION. n. s. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HE'BETE.* adj. [Latin, hebes.] Dull; stupid.

Examine and try the commonality in almost every place, and you must observe how hebetate and dull they are, how strangely unacquainted with what they profess to believe.

Ellis, Knowl. of Div. Things, p. 325.

HE'BETUDE. n. s. [hebetudo, Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.

The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues.

Harvey on the Plague.

HE'BRAISM. n. s. [hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into the language of his poem. Addison, Spect.

HE'BRAIST. n. s. [hebraeus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HE'BREW.* n. s. [Hebraeus, Lat. Ebriæus, old Fr. Ἑβραῖος, Gr. The name is, according to the most received opinion, from Eber, one of the ancestors of Abraham.]

1. An Israelite; one of the children of Israel. See Jew.

He spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren. Exod. ii. 11.

2. A Jew converted to Christianity.

It [the Epistle to the Hebrews] was written towards the end of, or soon after, St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome, A. D. 63, to the converted Jews of Palestine, here called Hebrews, as distinguished from the Hellenists, or foreign Jews. Bp. Percy, Key to the N. Test.

3. The Hebrew tongue.

And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. — And it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. St. John, xix. 20.

HE'BREW.* adj. Relating to the people or language of the Jews.

Persuade this Hebrew woman, which is with thee, that she come unto us. Judith, xii. 11.

He spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue. Acts, xxi. 40.

HE'BREWESS.* n. s. [from Hebrew.] An Israelitish or Jewish woman.

Every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

Jerem. xxxiv. 9.

HEBRI'DIAN.* adj. [from the Hebrides, the western isles.] Respecting the western islands of Scotland. Cockeram calls the Irish sea, "the Hebridian wave."

I was told by a gentleman, who is generally acknowledged the greatest master of Hebridian antiquities, that there had indeed once been both bards and senachies; and that senachi signified the man of talk, or of conversation; but that neither bard nor senachi had existed for some centuries. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

HEBRI'CIAN. n. s. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or other than the heavens, as the best Hebricians understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

HE'CATOMB. n. s. [hecatombe, Fr.; ἑκατόμβη, Gr.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.

In rich men's homes I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs; None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb, And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden. Her triumphant sons in war succeed, And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.

HECK.* n. s.

1. A rack at which cattle are fed with hay. [Su. Goth. haeck; the same.] North. Ray, and Grose.

2. The winding of a stream. [German, ecke.] Obsolete.

3. A kind of net formerly used in rivers; as, a salmon heck. Chambers.

4. A hatch or latch of a door. North. Grose.

HE'CKLE.* See HACKLE.

HE'CTICAL.† adj. [hectique, French, HE'CTICK.] from ἥκτις.]

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual; and, ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fullness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

That silence which I will not call a symptom of my sickness, but a sickness itself. Howsoever, I will keep it from being hectical.

Walton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 433.

A hectick fever hath got hold Of the whole substance, not to be control'd. Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

A corrosive to one already in a hectick condition. Howell, Lett. ii. 63.

The busy brain of a lean and hectick chymist. Sterne, Sermon.

HE'CTICALLY.* adv. [from hectical.] Constitutionally.

He was for some years hectically feverish. Johnson, Life of Ascham.

HE'CTICK.† n. s. An hectick fever.

Like the hectick in my blood he rages, And thou must cure me. Shakspeare, Hamlet. By wasting hecticks of his flesh bereft.

Sundays, Job, p. 48.

HE'CTOR. n. s. [from the name of Hector, the great Homerick warrior.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, pervicacious, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar, And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

TO HE'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Gov. of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit fortune makes her slave; But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

TO HE'CTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spectator.

Don Carlos made her chief director, That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HE'CTORLY.* adj. [from hector.] Blustering; insolent; outrageous.

Those, who seek glory from evil things, (who glory in their shame,) from presumptuous transgression of God's law, hectorly profaneness, and debauchery, from outrageous violence, from over-reaching craft, are not only vainglorious, but impudent. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 31.

HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Latin.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE.† n. s. [hegge, Saxon; and so our own word is written hegge by Wicliffe and Chaucer, from hegian, to enclose.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges' breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first show: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakspeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

TO HEDGE.† v. a. [Saxon, hegian.] 1. To enclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus. xxviii. 24.

Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hos. ii. 6.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedged in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes.

Shakespeare, K. John.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money: so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange?

Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

You forget yourself

To hedge me in. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

When I was hasty, thou delay'd'st me longer:
I pry'thee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise: for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own.

Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, and fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth: meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

Shakespeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. s. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. s. [hedge and hog; erinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount

Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under-part, head, belly, and legs, within his thicket of prickles.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

— I grant ye.

— Dost grant me, hedge-hog?

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata.

Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish; orbis echinatus.

Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. s. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary.

Hill, Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. s. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. s. A plant; galeopsis. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. s. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant raillery. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG. n. s. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,

Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

HEDGE-ROW. n. s. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen

By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle.

Berkeley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. s. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakspeare.

HEDGING-BILL. n. s. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chafing and swearing. Sidney.

HEDGER. n. s. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox

In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat.

Milton, Comus.

He would be laugh'd at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty.

Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [heban, Sax.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds; But wonders much at those new vocal reeds.

Dryden.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it.

Locke.

To HEED. v. n. To mind; to consider.

Thoughtless she leaves amid the dusty way
Her eggs, to ripen in the genial ray;
Nor heeds, that some fell beast, who thirsts for blood,

Or the rude foot, may crush the future brood.

Warton, Paraphr. of Job, ch. 39.

HEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,

Milton, L'All.

Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads.

Locke.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship.

Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts.

Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance.

Shakespeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says.

L'Estrange.

HEEDFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgements join,
In censure of his seeming.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing: with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue.

Shakespeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.

Shakespeare.

Thou heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HEEDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

That worthy divine did not heedfully observe the great difference betwix these instanced degrees.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 5.

I would wish parents to mark heedfully the witty excuses of their children.

Wotton on Education.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led.

Watts.

HEEDFULNESS. n. s. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HEEDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly.

Dict.

HEEDINESS. n. s. Caution; vigilance.

Dict.

And evermore that craven coward knight
Was at his backe with heartlesse heediness,
Wayting if he unware him murthier might.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 26.

HEEDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving: with of.

The heedless lover does not know
Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.

Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown.

Dryden.

Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men.

Locke.

Surprizes are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence.

Sherlock.

HEEDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Post not heedlessly on unto the non ultra of folly, or precipice of perdition.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 90.

Our women run on so heedlessly in the fashion, that though it is the interest of some to hide as much of their faces as possible, yet because a leading toast appeared with a backward head-dress,

They are heliſpherical lines, as they call them, that is, partly circular, and partly helical or spiral.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 285.

HE'LIX. n. s. [helice, Fr.; ἑλῖξ.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain.

Witkins.

HELL.† n. s. [Goth. halje, from huljan, to cover; Germ. hella; Sax. helle. "Some derive it from the Hebrew word sheol; either subtracting the first letter, or including it in the aspiration. — But the derivation given by Verstegan is the most probable; from being helled over, that is to say, hidden or covered. For in the German tongue (from whence our English was extracted) hil signifieth to hide; and hiluh, in Otfridus Wissenbergensis, is hidden: And in this country, [Ireland,] with them that retain the ancient language, which their forefathers brought with them out of England, to hell the head, is as much as to cover the head; and he that covereth the house with tile or slate, is from thence commonly called a hellier. So that, in the original propriety of the word, our hell doth exactly answer to the Greek ἄλλος, which denoteth τὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ τόπου, the place which is unseen, or removed from the sight of man." Abp. Usher's Answ. to the Jesuit Malone in Ireland, 4th edit. p. 219.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key.

Shakespeare, Macb.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; 'twill soyl must best

Deserve the precious bane.

Milton, P. L.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold

The glorious light he forfeited of old.

Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down into hell.

Gen. xxxvii. 35. (Don. and Ains. Tr. 1609, &c.)

He descended into hell.

Apostles' Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snails of death overtook me.

Psalm xxviii. 4.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,

That they, as well as they, hell may supply.

Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had, as well

As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;

Not with a counterfeited pass

Of golden bough, but true gold lace.

Hudibras.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell.

King, Cookery.

6. Formerly, a dungeon in a prison.

In Wood-street's hole, or Poultry's hell.

The Counter-Rat, 1658.

7. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,

While Saul and hell cross his strong fate in vain.

Cowley.

8. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head,

In hell-black night endur'd, would have holl'd up,

And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

HELL-BORN.* adj. [hell and born.] Born in hell.

Like the hell-born hydra.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 32.

Learu by proof,

Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of heaven.

Milton, P. L.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,

With foul enfolded smoke and flashing fire,

The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.

Spenser, F. Q.

HELL-BREWED.* adj. [hell and brew.] Prepared or brewed in hell.

Hence with thy hell-brew'd opiate.

Milton, Comus, ver. 696. (MS. reading.)

HELL-BROTH. n. s. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,

Lizard's leg and owlet's wing;

For a charm of pow'rful trouble,

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakspeare, Macb.

HELL-CAT.* n. s. [hell and cat.] Formerly, a witch; a hag.

The whorson old hell-cat would have given me the brayne of a cat once — I had her make sawce with't. Middleton's Witch.

HELL-CONFOUNDING.* adj. [hell and confound.] Vanquishing the power of hell.

With that he from his holy bosom drew

A golden banner, in whose silken lap

His Lord's almighty name wide open flew,

Of hell-confounding majesty made up:

The fiend no sooner Jesus there did read,

But shame pull'd down his eyes, and fear his head.

Beaumont, Psyche, p. 20.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,

Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,

Where I reign king. Milton, P. L.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide, and ate him quick,

As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd.

Shakspeare.

HELL-HAG.* n. s. [hell and hag.] A hag of hell.

A corroding disease it [envy] is; an hell-hag that feeds upon its own marrow, bones, and strongest parts. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 281.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,

With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shak.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,

And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,

Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove.

Dryden.

HELL-HOUND.† n. s. [hell-hunt, Saxon.] 1. Dog of hell.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death. Shaks.

Now the hell-hounds with superior speed

Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,

The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd.

Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd

My hell-hounds to lick up the draff, and filth,

Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed

On what was pure. Milton, P. L.

3. A profligate person.

Gods keep me from these hell-hounds.

Beaumont and Fl. Philost.

HELL-KITE. n. s. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh hell-kite! all?

What all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

HE'LLBORE. n. s. [helleborus, Lat.] Christmas flower.

HE'LLBORE. White.† n. s. [veratrum, Lat.] A plant.

of its species be the true hellebore of the ancients. Miller.

And melancholy cures by sovereign hellebore.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HE'LLBORISM.* n. s. [from hellebore.] A medicinal preparation of hellebore.

In vain should the physician attempt, with all his medicines and helleborisms, the cure of those that are sick of love, or any the like passions.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 169.

HE'LLENICK. adj. [ἑλληνικός, Gr.] Grecian; heathen.

So great an injury they [the Christians] then held it to be deprived of hellenick learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining and secretly decaying the church, than the open cruelty of Decius or Dioclesian. Milton, Areopagitica.

HELLENISM.† n. s. [ἑλληνισμός,] A Greek idiom.

Virgil is full of the Greek forms of speech, which the critics call hellenisms.

Addison, Spect. No. 285.

HE'LLENIST.* n. s. [ἑλληνιστής,] 1. A Grecianizing Jew.

That the thing was done by the Jews, I deny not; but by those, I mean the Hellenists.

Unto the helmeted Bellona use them,
And pray for me your soldier. Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kins.

HELMI'NTHICK. adj. [from ἐλμινθος.] Relating to worms. Dict.

HE'LMSMAN.* n. s. [helm and man.] He who manages the rudder of a vessel.

HE'LMWIND.* n. s. [helm and wind.] A particular kind of wind in some of the mountainous parts of England.

In these mountains [of Westmorland,] towards the north-east part of the county, is a very remarkable phenomenon, such as we have not found any account of elsewhere in the kingdom, except only about Ingleton, and other places bordering upon the mountains of Ingleborough, Pendle, and Penignt, in the confines of the counties of York and Lancaster. It is called a helmwind. A rolling cloud, sometimes for three or four days together, hovers over the mountain tops, the sky being clear in other parts. When this cloud appears, the country people say, the helm is up: which is an Anglo-Saxon word signifying properly a covering for the head. — This helm is not dispersed or blown away by the wind, but continues in its station, although a violent roaring hurricane comes tumbling down the mountain, ready to tear up all before it. Then on a sudden ensues a profound calm. And then again alternately the tempest; which seldom extends into the country above a mile or two from the bottom of the mountain. Burn & Nicholson, Hist. of Westm. & Cumb. i. 7.

HE'LOT.* n. s. [Lat. Helotes, from Helos, a Laconian town, conquered by the Spartans, who made all the inhabitants prisoners of war, and reduced them into the condition of slaves. Potter, Archæol. Gr. b. i. ch. 10.] A slave.

Nor was it lawful for any Spartan to improve this lot to the best, by living upon it; for they were strictly prohibited all occupations, even that of agriculture; and their hind or helots paid them only an annual quantity of corn, wine, and other fruits. Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, p. 140.

To HELP. v. a. preter. helped, or holp; part. helped, or holpen. [hilpan, Gothic; helpan, Saxon.]

1. To assist; to support; to aid.
Let us work as valiant men behave;
For holdest hearts good fortune helpeth out. Fairfax. Psalms.

O Lord, make haste to help me. Psalms.
God helped him against the Philistines. 2 Chron. xxvi. 7.

They helped them in all things with silver and gold. 1 Esdr.

A man reads his prayers out of a book, as a means to help his understanding and direct his expressions. Stillington.

2. It has, in familiar language, the particle out, which seems to have meant, originally, out of a difficulty.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you should join to help him out. Dryden.

What I offer is so far from doing any kindness to the cause these gentlemen are engaged in, that it does them a real service, and helps them out with the main thing wherewith they stuck. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The god of learning and of light,
Would want a god himself to help him out. Swift.

3. To raise by help: with up.

Woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up. Eccle. iv. 10.

4. To enable to surmount: with over.

Wherever they are at a stand, help them presently over the difficulty without any rebuke. Locke.

5. To remove by help: with off.

Having never learned any laudable manual art, they have recourse to those foolish or ill ways in use, to help off their time. Locke.

6. To free from pain or vexation.

Help and ease them, but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

7. To cure; to heal: with of. Obsolete.

Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness. Shakespeare.

8. It is used commonly before the disease.

The true calamus helps coughs. Gerard.

9. To remedy; to change for the better.

Cease to lament for that thou canst not help;
And study help for that which thou lament'st. Shakespeare.

10. To prevent; to hinder.

Those few who reside among us, only because they cannot help it. Swift.

If they take offence when we give none, it is a thing we cannot help, and therefore the whole blame must lie upon them. Sanderson.

It is a high point of ill nature to make sport with any man's imperfections, that he cannot help. L'Estrange.

Those closing skies may still continue bright;
But who can help it, if you'll make it night. Dryden.

She, betwixt her modesty and pride,
Her wishes, which she could not help, would hide. Dryden.

It is reckoned ill manners for men to quarrel upon difference in opinion, because that is a thing which no man can help in himself. Swift.

If you make the earth narrower at the bottom than at the top, in fashion of a sugar-loaf reversed, it will help the experiment.

Bacon.

13. To HELP to. To supply with; to furnish with.

Whom they would help to a kingdom, those reign; and whom again they would, they displace.

1 Mac. vii. 13.

The man that is now with Tiresias can help him to his oxen again.

L'Estrange.

14. To present at table.

In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate;
Treated, caress'd, and tir'd, I take my leave.

Pope.

To HELP. v. n.

1. To contribute assistance.

Have help to make this rescue?

Shakespeare.

Discreet followers and servants help much to reputation.

Bacon.

Bennet's grave look was a pretence,
And Danby's matchless impudence
Help'd to support the knave.

Dryden.

A generous present helps to persuade as well as an agreeable person.

Garth.

2. To bring a supply.

Some, wanting the talent to write, made it their care that the actors should help out where the muses failed.

Rymer.

HELP. v. n. s. [helpe, assistance, Sax. from the verb; hulpe, Dutch.]

1. Assistance; aid; support; succour.

Mulcaess, despairing to recover the city, hardly escaped his enemies' hands by the good help of his uncle.

Knolles.

He may be beholden to experience and acquired notions, where he thinks he has not the least help from them.

Locke.

So great is the stupidity of some of those, that they may have no sense of the help administered to them.

Smalridge.

2. That which gives help.

Though these contrivances increase the power, yet they proportionally protract the time: that which by such helps one man may do in a hundred days, may be done by the immediate strength of a hundred men in one day.

Wilkins.

Virtue is a friend and an help to nature; but it is vice and luxury that destroys it, and the diseases of intemperance are the natural product of the sins of intemperance.

South.

Another help St. Paul himself affords us towards the attaining the true meaning contained in his epistles.

Locke.

3. That which forwards or promotes.

Coral is in use as an help to the teeth of children.

Bacon.

4. Remedy.

There is no help for it, but he must be taught accordingly to comply with the faulty way of writing.

Holder on Speech.

HE'LPER. n. s. [from help.]

1. An assistant; an auxiliary; an aider; one that helps or assists.

There was not any left, nor any helper for Israel.

2 Kings.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth.

3 John, 8.

It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. One that administers remedy.

Compassion, the mother of tears, is not always a mere idle spectator, but an helper oftentimes of evils.

More.

3. One that supplies with any thing wanted: with to.

Heaven

Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband.

Shakespeare.

4. A supernumerary servant.

I live in the corner of a vast unfurnished house: my family consists of a steward, a groom, a helper in the stable, a footman, and an old maid.

Swift to Pope.

HE'LPFUL. adj. [help and full.]

1. Useful; that which gives assistance.

Let's fight with gentle words,

Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

Shakespeare.

He orders all the succours which they bring;
The helpful and the good about him run,
And form an army.

Dryden.

2. Wholesome; salutary.

A skilful chymist can as well, by separation of visible elements, draw helpful medicines out of poison, as poison out of the most healthful herbs.

Raleigh, Hist.

HE'LPFULNESS.* n. s. [from helpful.]

Assistance; usefulness.

God ordained it [marriage] in love and helpfulness to be indissoluble.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

HE'LPLESS. adj. [from help.]

1. Wanting power to succour one's self.

One dire shot

Close by the board the prince's main-mast bore;
All three now helpless by each other lie.

Dryden.

Let our enemies rage and persecute the poor and the helpless; but let it be our glory to be pure and peaceable.

Rogers.

2. Wanting support or assistance.

How shall I then your helpless fame defend?
'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend.

Pope.

3. Irremediable; admitting no help.

Such helpless harms it's better hidden keep,
Than rip up grief, where it may not avail.

Spenser.

4. Unsupplied; void: with of. This is unusual, perhaps improper.

Naked he lies, and ready to expire,
Helpless of all that human wants require.

Dryden.

HE'LPLESSLY.† adv. [from helpless.] Without ability; without succour.

If he thus be helplessly distract,
'Tis requisite his office be resign'd.

Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

HE'LPLESSNESS.† n. s. [from helpless.]

Want of ability; want of succour.

It was an objection constantly urged by the ancient Epicureans, that man could not be the creature of a benevolent being, as he was formed in a state so helpless and infirm: Montaigne took it and urged it also. They never considered or perceived that this very infirmity and helplessness were the cause and cement of society.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HE'LPMATE.* n. s. [help and mate.] A companion; an assistant; a partner.

HE'LTHER.* n. s. The northern pronunciation of halter. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Cumberland and Westmoreland Dialects. See also HELTER-SKELTER.

HELTHER-SKELTER.† adv. [as Skinner fancies, from heolþrean peabo, the darkness of hell; hell, says he, being a place of confusion. Dr. Johnson. — Others, not less fancifully, from the Latin hilariter and celeriter, i. e. merrily and hastily. But Grose has given the following derivation. "Kelter or kilter, is frame, order, condition, a northern word; hence helters-kelter, a corruption of halter, to hang, and kelter, order, i. e. hang order, or in defiance of order." Another Latin origin, hic et aliter, has been proposed; and a Dutch etymology has also been thought of: but they are perhaps all "fancies, built on nothing firm." See Craven Dialect, and Brockett's North Country Words.] In a hurry; without order; tumultuously.

Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend;
And helter-skelter have I rode to England,
And tidings do I bring.

Shakespeare.

He had no sooner turned his back, but they were at it helter-skelter, throwing books at one another's heads.

L'Estrange.

All dominion ended with the day, and males and females met helter-skelter.

Spect. No. 276.

HELVE.† n. s. [helpe, Sax.; helve, Germ. perhaps from healban, to hold.] The handle of an axe.

His hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve.

Deut. xix. 5.

To HELVE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with a helve or handle.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HEM.* pron. [Sax. hem.] Them. We may be said to retain this old word, in our writing and speaking 'em for them; as, I have seen 'em this morning.

Such end perdy does all hem remain,
That of such falsers' friendship bene fain.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

HEM. n. s. [hem, Saxon.]

1. The edge of a garment doubled and sewed to keep the threads from spreading.

Rollers must be made of even cloth, white and gentle, without hem, seam, or thread hanging by.

Wise men.

2. [Hemmen, Dutch.] The noise uttered by a sudden and violent expiration of the breath.

He loves to clear his pipes in good air, and is not a little pleased with any one who takes notice of the strength which he still exerts in his morning hems.

Addison.

3. Interject. Hem! [Lat.]

I would try if I could cry hem, and have him.

Shakespeare.

To HEM.† v. a.

1. To close the edge of cloth by a hem or double border sewed together.

The contexture of this speech will perhaps be the less subject to ravel out, if I hem it with the speech of our learned and pious annotator.

Spenser on Prodigies, p. 202.

2. To border; to edge.

All the skirt about

Was hemm'd with golden fringe. Spenser, F. Q.
Along the shore of silver streaming Thames,
Whose rushy bank, the which his river hems.

Spenser.

3. To enclose; to environ; to confine; to shut: perhaps always with a particle; as, in, about, round.

So of either side, stretching itself in a narrow length, was it hemmed in by woody hills, as if indeed nature had meant therein to make a place for beholders.

Sidney.

What lets us then the great Jerusalem
With valiant squadrons round about to hem?

Fairfax.

Why, Neptune, hast thou made us stand alone,
Divided from the world for this, say they;
Hem'd in to be a spoil to tyranny,
Leaving affliction hence no way to fly? Daniel.
I hurry me in haste away,
And find his honour in a pound,
Hem'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons, blue and green. Pope.

To HEM.† v. n. [hemmen, Dutch.] To utter a noise by violent expulsion of the breath.

She speaks much of her father; says, she hears There's tricks in the world; and hems, and beats her heart, Shakespeare, Hamlet.
He's dry, he hems!

Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

HEMISPHERE. n. s. [ἡμισφαῖριον; hemisphere, French.] The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.

That place is earth, the seat of man; that light
His day, which else, as the other hemisphere, Night would invade. Milton, P. L.

A hill

Of Paradise the highest, from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay.

Milton, P. L.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;
So in this hemisphere our utmost view
Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHERICAL.† adj. [from hemisphere.]
HEMISPHERICK. } Half round; containing half a globe.

The thin film of water swells above the surface of the water it swims on, and commonly constitutes hemispherical bodies with it.

HEMISTICH, or HEMISTICK.† n. s. [ἡμιστίχον; hemistiche, Fr. It is most correctly written hemistich, as distich.] Half a verse.

He broke off in the hemistich, or midst of the verse; but, seized as it were with a divine fury, he made up the latter part of the hemistich.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The method of writing parallel hemistichs in opposite columns—may sometimes have caused a transposition of whole lines.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. Tr. of the Bib. p. 248.

HEMISTICAL.* adj. [from hemistich.] Denoting a division of the verse.

The reader will observe the constant return of the hemistichal point, which I have been careful to preserve;—as I suspect, that it shews how these poems were sung to the harp by the minstrels.

Watson, Hist. E. P. Add. to Vol. i.

The hemistichal division is not exhibited to the eye in the printed page.

Bp. Horsley, Tr. of Hosea, p. 43.

HEMLOCK. n. s. [hemleac, Saxon.] An herb.

The leaves are cut into many minute segments: the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped, and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channelled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious; but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different.

Miller.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With hardocks, hemlock.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

We cannot with certainty affirm, that no man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock.

Locke.

Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourageth to rob his hen-roosts.

Swift.

If a man prosecutes gipsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it.

Addison.

They oft have sally'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village.

Tickell.

HE'NBANE. n. s. [hyoscyamus, Lat.] A plant.

It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant.

Miller.

That to which old Sorrell was curs'd,
Or henbane juice, to sweat 'em till they burst.

Dryden.

HE'NBIT. n. s. [Alsine foliis hederaceis.] A plant.

In a scarcity in Sicilia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit.

Derham, Phys. Theology.

HENCE.† adv. or interj. [heonan, Saxon; hennes, old English; hin, German; hinc, Latin.]

1. From this place to another.

Discharge my follow'rs; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.

Shakespeare.

The Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence.

Milton, P. L.

A sullen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence.

Roscom.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here; hence with your little ones.

Shakespeare.

Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse.

Milton, Lycidas.

3. At a distance; in other places. Not in use.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

Shakespeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinewed to this action.

Shakespeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may.

Locke.

Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants.

Arbuthnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.

Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction; hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.

My Flora was my sun; for as
One sun, so but one Flora was:
All other faces borrow'd hence
Their light and grace, as stars do thence.

Suckling.

8. From hence is a vicious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophes'd from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince!

Dryden.

TO HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.

Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curst.

Sidney.

HENCEFO'RW'RD. adv. [henonpōd, Saxon.] From this time forward.

Thanes and kinsmen,

Henceforth be earls.
Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier cannot be to;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess.

Milton, P. L.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
Till day droop. Milton, P. L.
If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come?
Dryden.

HENCEFO'RW'RD. adv. [hence and for-ward.] From this time to futurity.

Henceforward will I bear

Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shaks.
Pardon, I beseech you;

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shakespeare.
The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endued with good qualities.

Dryden.

HE'NCHMAN.† n. s. [hýne, or hine, Sax. a servant, and man, Skinner: hengst, Teut. a horse, and man, Spelman. Sax. henger, a horse. And the primary usage of henchman is in the sense of a horseman. Our old poets often use henchboy also for an attendant, and we have now horseboy. Mr. Archdeacon Nares and another literary friend, however, prefer the simple etymology of Judge Blackstone, in a note on Dr. Percy's Northumberland Household Book, viz. haunchman, from following the haunch of his master.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.

Every knight had after him riding
Three henchmen [each] on him awaiting.

Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon?

I do but beg a little changing boy,
To be my henchman.

Shakespeare.

Three henchmen were for every knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind.

Dryden.

HEND.* } adj. [probably from the Sax. HENDY. } hean, humble. Both words are used by Chaucer; but they have long been obsolete.] Gentle. Bullockar.

Sire, ye should ben hende
And curteis, as a man of your estat;
In compaignie we wiln have no debat.

Chaucer, Freer's Prol.

This clerk was cleped hendy Nicholas.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

TO HEND. v. a. [hentan, Saxon, from hendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hond, Teutonic.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.

With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain.

Faust.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering.

Shakespeare.

HENDE'CAGON. n. s. [ἐνδεκά and γωνία.] A figure of eleven sides or angles.

HENDECASY'LLABLE.* n. s. [ἐνδεκά and σάλλατος, Gr.] A metrical line consisting of eleven syllables.

A living author, that must be nameless, has written the following hendecasyllables:
O dulcis puer, O venuste Marce, &c.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HENDI'ADIS.* n. s. [ἐνδιὰς, Gr.] A rhetorical figure, when two noun substantives are used instead of a substantive and adjective.

Scott.

HENS-FEET. n. s. [fumaria sepium.] Hedge fumitory.

TO HENT.* v. a. [Sax. hentan; Su. Goth. haenta; from hand.] To catch; to lay hold of. See TO HEND. Bullockar.

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stile-a. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

HEP.† n. s. [Sax. heap.] The fruit of the wild-briar, or dog-rose; commonly written hip. See HIP.

In hard winters there is observed great plenty of heps and haws, which preserve the small birds from starving. Bacon.

HEPA'TICAL. } adj. [hepaticus, Latin; HEPA'TICK. } hepaticus, French, from ἥπαρ.] Belonging to the liver.

If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it's hepatic.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The cystick gall is thick, and intensely bitter; the hepatic gall is more fluid, and not so bitter.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HE'PEN.* adj. [Sax. hepelic.] Neat; decent; comfortable. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

HEPTACA'PSULAR. adj. [ἑπτά and capsula.] Having seven cavities or cells.

HE'PTACHORD.* n. s. [heptacorde, Fr. ἑπτά, Gr. seven, and χορδή, a chord.] Anciently, a musical instrument of seven strings; as, the lyre; and also a poetical composition played or sung on seven different notes or sounds.

HE'PTAGON. n. s. [heptagone, French; ἑπτά and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTA'GONAL.† adj. [from heptagon.] Having seven angles or sides.

In a circle describe an heptagonal and equilateral figure. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

HEPTA'MEREDE.* n. s. [heptameride, Fr. ἑπτά, Gr. seven, and μέρος, a portion.] That which divides into seven parts.

The heptamerede of M. Sauvour could express an interval so small as the seventh part of what is called a comma, the smallest interval that is admitted in modern music.

A. Smith on the Imitative Arts.

HEPTA'RHICK.* adj. [heptarchique, Fr. from heptarchy.] Denoting a sevenfold government.

The Saxons practised this mode of division for fixing the several extents of their heptarchic empire. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 69.

HE'PTARCHIST. n. s. [from heptarchy.] He who rules one of the divisions of a sevenfold government.

In 752, the Saxon heptarchists, Cuthred and Eihelbald, fought a desperate battle at Borsford, or Burford. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 48.

HE'PTARCHY. n. s. [heptarchie, French; ἑπτά and ἀρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of power,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent.

Dryden.

HEPTATEUCH.* n. s. [heptateuque, Fr. ἐπτά, Gr. seven, and τεῦχος, a work, a book.] A term applied to the first seven books of the Old Testament.

HER. pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shaks. As you like it.
Still new favourites she chose,
Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sovereign power;
Wonderous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.
The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her rise, with her they set again. Cowley.
Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HER's. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are her's.

This pride of her's,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakespeare.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not her's confess. Cowley.

Some secret charm had all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, her's could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not her's, but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n. s. [herault, Fr.; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,

For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. B. Jonson.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shaks.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shaks.

To HERALD. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as by an herald. A word not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee. Shakespeare.

HERALD'ICK.* adj. [from herald.] Denoting genealogy; relating to heraldry.

The figures of herself and sir Thomas Pope, both kneeling in their heraldic surcoats of arms.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 199.
Nature directs the thistle to honour the rose above all other flowers, exclusive of the heraldic meaning. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 263.

HERALDRY. n. s. [heraulderie, French, from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.
Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry, when madness drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

3. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleveland.

HERALDSHIP.* n. s. [from herald.] The office of an herald, as a proclaimer.

Being by name president of ways, and by his office of heraldship peacemaker, as an old stamp tides him, [Mercury]. Selden on Drayton's Polyol. S. 3.

HERB. n. s. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.
In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Æson. Shakespeare.

With sweet-smelling herbs
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton, P. L.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.
If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts, Logick.

Herb eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HERB Christopher, or Bane-berries, n. s.
A plant.

HERBACEOUS. adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk;
but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water-flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables; perhaps not properly.

Their teeth are fitted to their food; the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.

HERBAGE. n. s. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grass; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields. Dryden.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woodward.

2. The tythe and the right of pasture.

HERBAGED.* adj. [from herbage.] Covered with grass.

Delicious is your shelter to the soul,
As to the hunted hart the sallying spring,

Or stream full flowing, that his swelling sides
Laves, as he floats along the herbag'd brink. Thomson, Summer.

HERBAL. n. s. [from herb.] A book containing the names and description of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history. Bacon.
Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof.

More, Antid. against Atheism.
Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants. Baker.

HERBAL.* adj. Pertaining to herbs.

The herbal savour gave his sense delight.
Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620), I. 3. b.
The least of herbal plants, [mustard-seed].
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 28.

HERBALIST.† n. s. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

What every herbalist almost, and physician, hath written. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 551.

Other plants, and trees, and herbs, and flowers, should constantly partake of the like decay;—
which our best physicians and herbalists have not yet found to be so. Hakewill on Providence, p. 145.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HERBAR. n. s. [A word I believe only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

The roof hereof was arch'd overhead,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily. Spenser, F. Q.

HERBARIST. n. s. [herbarius, from herba,
Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much swayed by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours or multiplicity of leaves in the flower were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray on the Creation.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist. Derham.

To HERBARIZE.* v. n. [Fr. herboriser;
from herb.] To go about gathering medicinal herbs.

The apothecaries' company very seldom miss coming to Hampstead every spring, and here have their herbarizing feast; and I have heard them often say, that they have found a greater variety of curious and useful plants near and about Hampstead than in any other place.

Soame, Analysis of Hampstead Water, (1734), p. 27.

HERBARY.* n. s. [Lat. herbarium. Our old word is herbere, or erbere.] A garden of herbs.

An herbary for furnishing domestick medicines, always made a part of our ancient gardens.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 231.

HERBELET. n. s. [Diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

These herbelets, which we upon you strow. Shakespeare.

HERBER.* n. s. See HERBARY. It was also formerly an arbour.

A pleasant herber well wrought.
Chamcer, Fl. and Leaf.

HERBESCENT. adj. [herbescens, Latin.]
Growing into herbs.

HERBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HE'RBIST.* n. s. [from herb.] One skilled in herbs; an herbalist. Sherwood.
HE'RBLESS.* adj. [herb and less.] Having no herbs; bare.

His slumbers short, his bed the herbless ground.
Abs. and Achitophel, P. ii.
 'Near some rugged herbless rock,
 Where no shepherd keeps his flock.
Jos. Warton, Ode to Solitude.

HE'RBORIST. n. s. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HERBORIZA'TION.* n. s. [French; from herboriser.] The appearance of plants in fossils.

Mr. Daubenton gives an account of three different kinds of herborizations. The first, amongst which are those found on agats, are owing to parts of real plants. — The second sort is owing to the stone containing particles of iron, which are so disposed as to present ramifications, &c.
Matys, Acc. of Hist. of R. Acad. of Sciences at Paris.

HE'RBOUR.* See HARBOUR.

HE'RBORULESS.* See HARBOURULESS.

HE'RBOROUGH. n. s. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbour.

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

HE'RBIOUS.† adj. [herbosus, Latin, And in our old lexicography, herbosus is the English word; "full of grass." Cockeram.] Abounding with herbs.

HE'RBULENT. adj. [from herbula.] Containing herbs. Dict.

HE'RBWOMAN. n. s. [herb and woman.] A woman that sells herbs.

I was like to be pulled to pieces by brewer, butcher, and baker; even my herbwoman dunned me as I went along.
Arbutnot.

HE'RBY.† adj. [from herb.]

1. Having the nature of herbs.

No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moss or herby substance.
Bacon.

2. Full of herbs. Huloet, and Sherwood.

HERCU'LEAN.* adj. [from Hercules.]

1. One of extraordinary strength like Hercules.

But what's the end of thy Herculean labours?
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
 So rose the Danite strong,
Herculean Samson, from the harlot lap
 Of Philistean Dalilah. Milton, P. L.

2. Befitting Hercules; large; massy.

He is about to repeat the blow with an huge, herculean club.
Drummond, Trav. p. 51.

HERD.† n. s. [heorð, hepð, Sax.; hiord, Goth. from hyrda, to keep. Serenius. So Mr. H. Tooke deduces the Saxon word from the verb hyrðan, to keep. Some French etymologists, noticing their old word herde, conceive it to be from the Lat. hævere, to be close together.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black cattle. Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

To make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock. Num. xv. 3.

There find a herd of heifers wandering o'er
 The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.
Addison.

2. A company of men in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
 Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.
 I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truths by the herd. Locke.

3. Not always in contempt and detestation, as the preceding definition of Dr. Johnson insinuates.

The impartial gods, who from the mounted heavens
 View us their mortal herd, behold who err,
 And in their time chastise.
Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

4. It anciently signified a keeper of cattle, and in the north of England it is still used. [hyrð, Saxon.] A sense still retained also in composition: as, goatherd.
 From thence into the open fields he fled,
 Whereas the herds were keeping of their neat.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 4.

Ne was there herd, ne was there shepherd's swayne,
 But her did honour. Ibid. st. 10.

TO HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.

Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.
Dryden.
 It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endure men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.
Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem
 One of the number. Addison, Cato.
 Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,
 And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd. Walsh.

TO HERD.† v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

The rest,
 However great we are, honest and valiant,
 Are herded with the vulgar. B. Jonson, Catiline.
 The most in fields like herded beasts lie down.
Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

HE'RDESS.* n. s. [from herd, a keeper of cattle.] A shepherdess. Obsolete.

An herdessa,
 Which that cyclopid was Enone.
Chaucer, Tr. i. 654.

As a herdessa in a summer's day,
 Heat with the glorious sun's all purging ray.
Brownie, Brit. Past.

HE'RDGROOM. n. s. [herd and groom.] A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?
 That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other.
Spenser.

HE'RDMAN.† n. s. [herd and man. Sax. HE'RDSMAN.] heapman.] One employed in tending herds: formerly an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
 In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.
 The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa. Amos, i. 1.

And you, enchantment,
 Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
 These rural latches to his entrance open,
 I will devise a cruel death for thee.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Scarce themselves know how to hold
 A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
 That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs.

Milton, Lycidas.
 There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 At loop-holes cut through thickest shade.
Milton, P. L.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
 Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.
Dryden.

The herdsmen, round
 The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden, Virg. Georg.
 When their herdsmen could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HERE.† adv. [hep, Saxon; hier, Dutch; her, Icel. and Goth.]

1. In this place.

Before thy here approach,
 Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
 All ready at appoint, was setting forth.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I, upon my frontiers here,
 Keep residence. Milton, P. L.

Here Nature first begins
 Her farthest verge. Milton, P. L.
 How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
 While he his second misery suffers here! Cowley.
 To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thou shalt you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for my earnest: Dryden.

4. In drinking a health.

 However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;
 To him who was the king, the friend replies. Prior.

5. It is often opposed to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night: mine eyes do itich;
 Doth that bode weeping?
 — 'Tis neither here nor there. Shakspeare, Othello.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee
there. Shakspeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;
 Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade;
 and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions,
 have drawn in here and there a single proselyte.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt, Sermon.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another.
Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
 Thou loost here, a better where to find.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

HE'REABOUT.* adv. [here and about.]

About this place.
 For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;
 His looks I fear, and his intent I doubt.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

HE'REABOUTS. adv. [here and about.]
 About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakespeare.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs

From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt. Milton, P. L.

Hereafter he from war shall come, And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER.† n. s. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the examples from Addison's Cato, and from Prior. Yet it is finely employed in prose.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us; 'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter, And intimates eternity to man. Addison, Cato.

He supersedes every little prospect of gain and advantage which offers itself here, if he does not find it consistent with his views of an hereafter.

Addison, Spect. No. 235.
The mind that is habituated to the lively sense of an hereafter, can hope for what is the most terrifying to the generality of mankind, and rejoice in what is the most afflicting. Tatler, No. 156.

I still shall wait

Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HEREDITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] That may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HEREDITAMENT.† n. s. [heredium, Lat.]

A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

Hereditament, says Sir Edward Coke, includes not only lands and tenements, but whatsoever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. Blackstone.

HEREDITARILY.† adv. [from hereditary.]

By inheritance.

In this kingdom such were hereditarily honoured with it. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.
Titular respects, which those who are really and hereditarily possessed of, can wield without any such taint or suspicion of transiency.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 420.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily.

Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARIUS. adj. [hereditarius, Fr.; hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever, Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.

These old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shaks.

He shall ascend

The throne hereditary, and bound his reign With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton, P. L.

'Tis while the mute creation downward bend Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend, Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden, Ovid.

When heroick verse his youth shall raise, And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden, Virg.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgement is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing, Hereout up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITE.* n. s. See EREMITA. A hermit.

Heremites, and other votaries, professing only devotion. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 85.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of ἔρημος, a desert; heremitical, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESIARCH. n. s. [heresiarque, French; αἱρεσιάρχης and ἀρχή.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresiarch. Stillingfleet.

HERESIARCHY.* n. s. [from heresiarch.]

Principal heresy.

The book itself [the Alcoran] consists of heresiarchies against our Blessed Saviour.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 323.

HERESY. n. s. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; αἵρεσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgement, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissolality. King Charles.

HERETICK. n. s. [heretique, French; αἱρετικός.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretic or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No heretics desire to spread Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.
Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretic instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word heretics, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons willfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts, Logic.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands, In him that was of late an heretic, As firm as faith. Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible, even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETOCH.* n. s. [Sax. hepetoza, from hepe, an army, and teon, to lead.] A general; a leader of an army. Obsolete.

In the time of our Saxon ancestors, as appears from Edward the Confessor's laws, the military force of this kingdom was in the hands of the dukes or heretochs. Blackstone.

HERETO'. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO'. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whoso assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREUPON.* adv. [here and upon.] Upon this.

The melancholy silence that follows hereupon — raises in the spectators a grief that is inexpressible. Tatler, No. 133.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismayd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand.

Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots.

Hayward.

HERIOT.† n. s. [hepegiß, Sax. Dr. Johnson. The Saxon hepegiß was military tribute; and hepegeat, which some derive from hepe, an army, and geotan, to render, to pay, was the military assistance formerly supplied by the vassal to his lord.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, sometimes the best thing in the landholder's possession; usually, a beast.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispense with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year.

Howell, Voc. Forest.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due.

Cleaveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

HERIOTABLE.* adj. [from heriot.] Subject to the demand of an heriot.

The tenants are chiefly customary and heriotable.

Dunn, Hist. Cymb. and Westm. i. 174.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England.

Hale's Common Law.

HERITAGE.† n. s. [heritage, French. Not often found in the plural.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

To cause to inherit the desolate heritages.

Isaiah, xlix. 8.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day.

Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage.

Common Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITE.* n. s. [from hermaphrodite.] The being in the state of an hermaphrodite.

Some do believe hermaphroditey,

That both do and can suffer.

B. Jonson, Alchem.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. s. [hermaphrodite, Fr. from ἑρμῆς and ἀφροδίτη.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right

Canonical hermaphrodite.

Cleaveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites.

Arbutnot and Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL.† adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

[These ladies] cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain of fashion, with most masculine, or rather hermaphroditical, authority.

B. Jonson, Epicæne.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms.

Brown.

There is another kind of occasional dress in use among the ladies; I mean the riding habit, which some have not injudiciously styled the hermaphroditical, by reason of its masculine and feminine composition.

Guardian, No. 149.

HERMAPHRODITICAL.* adv. [from hermaphroditical.] After the manner of both sexes.

Unite not the vices of both sexes in one; be not monstrous in iniquity, nor hermaphroditically vicious.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 31.

HERMAPHRODITICK.* adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

Look on me, and with all thine eyes,

Male, female, yea hermaphroditick eyes.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

HERMETICAL.† adj. [from Hermes, HERMETICK.] or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

Their seals, their characters, hermetick rings,
Their gem of riches, and bright stone that brings Invisibility.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together.

Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal.

Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there.

Bentley.

HERMIT. n. s. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivescore winters worn,

Might shake off fifty looking in her eye.

Shaksp.

You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

He had been duke of Savoy, and after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot.

Add. on Italy.

2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,

And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Shakespeare.

HERMITAGE. n. s. [hermitage, French.]

The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass

Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;

On top whereof a sacred chapel was,

And eke a little hermitage thereby.

Spenser, F. Q.

Go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

Shakespeare.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew.

Milt. Il Pens.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks.

Addison on Italy.

HERMITAGE.* n. s. A French wine.

By the infusion of three drops out of one of his phials, he converted it into a most beautiful pale Burgundy. Two more of the same kind heightened it into a perfect Languedoc; from thence it passed into a florid Hermitage.

Addison, Tatler, No. 131.

HERMITARY.* n. s. [from hermit.] A religious cell, annexed to some abbey. This is sometimes written hermitage.

HERMITESS.† n. s. [from hermit.] Written hermîtresse, by Drummond; from the Fr. hermîtresse, Cotgrave and Sherwood.] A woman retired to devotion.

Here she stay'd; among these pines,
Sweet hermitess, she did alone repair.

Drummond, Sonnets.

The violet is truly the hermîtess of flowers, affecting woods and forests.

Parthenocia Sacra, (1633,) p. 38.

HERMITICAL.† adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

You would have me resolve the hermitical and austere character into a timid, gloomy, and phlegmatic one.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. I.

HERMODACTYL. n. s. [ἑρμῆς and δάκτυλος.]

Hermodyctyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used.

Hill, Mat. Med.

HERN. n. s. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern.

Peachment on Drawing.

A hernia would certainly succeed.

Wiseman, Surgery.

HERNSHAW.* n. s. [from heron; and written also hernsew, and heronshaw, whence the vulgar corruption handsaw, noticed by Warburton in one of the following examples. It is likewise written heron-sew: from heron and sue, for pursue; from the propensity of the bird to pursue fish. Skinner. Craven Dialect.] A heron.

As when a cast of falcons make their flight
At an hern shaw, that lies aloft on wing,
The whyles they strike at him with heedless might

The warie foule his bill doth backward wing.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 9.

Like a tame hernsew. B. Jonson, Staple of News. "I know a hawk from a handsaw." Shakspere's Hamlet. This was a common proverbial speech. The Oxford editor alters it to "I know a hawk from an hernshaw;" as if the other had been a corruption of the players; whereas the poet found the proverb thus corrupted in the mouth of the people: so that the critic's alteration only serves to shew us the original of the expression.

Warburton.

HERO. n. s. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

I sing of heroes and of kings,

In mighty numbers mighty things.

Cowley.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope on the Odys.
These are thy honours, not that here thy bust is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect; as, a hero in learning.

HEROESS. n. s. [from hero; herois, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Befitting an hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.

Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprizes. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero. Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad; And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HERO'ICK.† adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.] 1. Productive of heroes.

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakspeare.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name To person or to poem. Milton.

Verse makes heroick virtue live, But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Methinks heroick poesy, till now, Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of a man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

4. Denoting that kind of verse, in which heroick or epick poems are usually composed.

The measure is English heroick verse without rime, as that of Homer in Greek, and of Virgil in Latin. Milton, Introd. to P. L.

HERO'ICK.* n. s. An heroick verse; which consists, in our poetry, of ten feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HERO'ICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd A life heroick. Milton.

HEROICO'MICAL.* adj. [from hero and HEROICO'MICK.] comical. Consisting of a mixture of dignity and levity.

He offended Pope, by adopting the machinery of his sylphs, in an heroicomic poem. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

The Rape of the Lock, now before us, is the fourth, and most excellent of the heroicomic poems. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

HER'ROINE. n. s. [from hero; heroine, Fr.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul, New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul; The heroine assum'd the woman's place, Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage More noble characters expose to view, And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HER'ROISM. n. s. [heroisme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broomie, Notes to the Odyssey.

HER'RON. n. s. [heron, Fr.] 1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of stag and heron full, Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing, Who terror bears upon his soaring wing; Let them on high the frighted heron survey, And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HER'RONRY.† n. s. [from heron; commonly pronounced hernry. Dr. Johnson joins heronshaw with this word as denoting place, without any authority; and it is believed to be used only of the bird. See HERNSHAW.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham, Physico-Theology.

HER'ROSEW.* } n. s. See HERNSHAW.

But were thy years green, as now bene mine, — Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love, And herry with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

HER'SITANCY. n. s. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Aterbury.

HER'SITANT.* adj. [from hesitate.] Pausing; wanting volubility of speech.

He was a man of no quick utterance, but often hesitant; but spake with great reason.

Baxter's Life and Times, P. III. p. 47.

To HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, Fr.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HE'SITATION. n. s. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HE'SKY. * See HUSKY.

HEST. † n. s. [hæst, Saxon, one of our oldest words, from the Goth. haitan, to command; written also heast. Wicliffe uses it.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written hehest.

The sacred things and holy heastes foretaught.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thou dost afflict the not deservest,
As him that doth thy lovely heasts despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate

To act her earthly and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand heasts. Shakespeare.

HE'STERN. * See YESTER.

HE'TERARCHY. * n. s. [ἑταρχία, another, and ἀρχή, command, Gr.] The government of an alien.

It is a joy to think we have a king of our own; our own blood; our own religion; — otherwise, next to anarchy, is heterarchy; neither do we find much difference betwixt having no head at all, and having another man's head on our shoulders.

Bp. Hall, Serm. Christ and Caesar.

HE'TEROCLITE. † n. s. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτερός and κλίσις.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise, are called heteroclitics. Clarke.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

Heteroclitics, which no new hospital can hold, no physick help.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

There are strange heteroclitics in religion now-a-days.

Howell, Lett. iv. 35.

Here only riddles be,
And heteroclitics in physiognomy.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 32.

The example will, I believe, be found an heteroclitic, and to stand alone in the history of nature.

Spencer on Prod. p. 160.

HE'TEROCLITE. * adj.

1. Denoting nouns varying from the common forms of declension.

The heteroclitic nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Deviating from common rules; singular.

Upon a general view of his poetry, we shall find him, as in his other performances, an uncommon, surprising, heteroclitic genius.

Orrery on Swift, p. 120.

It is impossible for a man of sense to guard against the mortification that may be given him by fools, or heteroclitic characters, because he cannot foresee them. Shenstone.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitic.] Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HETEROCLITOUS. * adj. [from heteroclitic.] Varying from grammatical declension.

Parrot-like, repeating heteroclitous nouns and verbs.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Hartlib, (1648), p. 23.

HE'TERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτερος and δόξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HE'TERODOX. n. s. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HE'TERODOXY. * n. s. [from heterodox.] The quality of being heterodox.

Pelagianism and Socinianism, with several other heterodoxies cognate to, and dependant upon them.

South, Dedic. of his Sermon to the Univ. of Oxford.

Heterodoxies, false doctrines, yea and heresies may be propagated by prayer as well as preaching.

Bp. Bull, Works, ii. 562.

HE'TEROGENE. * adj. [heterogene, Fr. ἑτερος and γένος, Gr.] Not of the same kind; dissimilar.

An old French hood,

And other pieces, heterogene enough.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

All the guests are so meer heterogene,
And strangers, no man knows another.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

HETEROGENEAL. † adj. [heterogene, Fr.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not com-material, but merely heterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whatsoever next presents itself, his heavy conceit seizeth upon, and goeth along with, however heterogeneous to his matter in hand.

Donne, Charact. of a Dunce.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

Newton.

HETEROGENE'ITY. n. s. [heterogeneité, Fr. from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety of dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaicum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water, and charcoal.

Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. † adj. [ἑτερος and γένος.]

Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature; which cannot be arranged one under another.

That which may be added to, or subtracted from, a right-lined angle, is homogeneous to it: because heterogeneous quantities are not capable of addition or subtraction.

Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, § 4.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone.

Woodward.

'HETEROGENEOUSNESS. * n. s. [from heterogeneous.] Dissimilitude in nature; contrariety of parts. Ash.

HETERO'SCIAN. * adj. [ἑτερος and σκία, Gr.] Having the shadow only one way. See HETEROSCIANS.

The noon-shadows are heteroscian.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 900.

HETERO'SCIANS. n. s. [ἑτερος and σκία.]

Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.

HE'TTER. * adj. Eager; earnest; keen. A northern word. Grose, and Brockett. Perhaps from hot, the latter observes.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [heapan, Sax. hawen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steal did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose

Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends.

Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured.

Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryden.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,

And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare. Coriol.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Scarce can I speak, my cholera is so great:

Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint.

Shakespeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He, from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk.

Milton, P. L.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage.

Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high.

Isa. xxii. 16.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations.

K. Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks.

Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god. Dryden, Fab.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone.

Mortimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new.

Pope to Swift.

HEW.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Destruction by cutting down.

Then to the rest his wrathful hand he bends;
Of whom he makes such havoc and such hew,
That swarms of damned souls to hell he sends.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 49.

2. Colour. So hue was formerly written.

See HUE.

HE'WER.† n. s. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water.

Deut. xxix. 11.

And Solomon had forescore thousand hewers in the mountains.

1 Kings, v. 15.

That is, hewers of stone; for timber was hewed by Hiram's servants in Lebanon.

Patrick.

HE'XACHORD.* n. s. [εξ and χορδή, Gr.] In music, a concord, commonly called a sixth.

HEXA'E'DRON.* n. s. [εξ and ἔδρα, Gr.] In geometry, a cube.

HE'XAGON.* n. s. [hexagone, French; εξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered.

Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal.

Ray.

HEXA'GONY.* n. s. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

HEXA'METER.* n. s. [εξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick.

Dryden.

HEXA'METER.* adj. Having six metrical feet.

Like Ovid's Fasti, in hexameter and pentameter verse.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HEXAME'TRICAL.* } adj. Consisting of HEXA'METRIC.* } hexameters.

That Ovid among the Latin poets was Milton's favourite, appears not only from his elegiac but his hexametric poetry.

Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

I have already cited his version of Naëgeorgus's hexametrical poem.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 458.

HE'XAPEDE.* n. s. [εξ, Gr. and pedes, Lat.] A fathom.

Cockeram.

HEXA'NGULAR. adj. [εξ and angulus, Lat.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal.

Woodward.

HE'XAPOD.* n. s. [εξ and πῶδες.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America.

Ray.

HEXAS'TICK.† n. s. [εξ and σῆμα, Gr.] Usually written hexastick; but hexastich would be more correct. It was formerly hexastichon. A poem of six lines.

His request to Diana in an hexastich.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 1.

That famous hexastich which Sannazarus made.

Howell, Lett. i. i. 36.

The following hexastic on a similar subject, is of the same rude period.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 30.

HE'XASTYLE.* n. s. [εξ and ὑλός, Gr.] In architecture, a building with six columns in front.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyric:
Then hey for praise and panegyrick.

Prior.

HEY.* See, under HAY, To dance the HAY, and also HEYDEGUY.

HEY'DAY.† interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder; pronounced high-day.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday!

Hudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. s. A frolick; wildness.

At your age

The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,

And waits upon the judgement.

Shakspeare.

HEY'DEGUY.† n. s. [perhaps from heyday, and guise, meaning in a frolick manner; or from hay, in the sense of dancing the hay, i. e. in a figure or company of eight, huit, Fr. Dr. Johnson merely notices this word as if it were heydegive, and corrupts the example in Spenser accordingly. There is no such word as heydegives.] A kind of dance; a country-dance, or round, as the contemporary commentator on Spenser explains it.

Friendly Faeries, met with many Graces,
And lightfoot Nymphs, can chase the lingring night
With heydeguyes and trimly trodden traces.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

Our banquet done, we had our musick by,
And then, you know, the youth must needs go dance,

First, galliards; then, larousse; and heideguy.

Bretton's Works of a Young Wü. (1577.)

The nimble Cambrian rills

Dance hy-day-gies amongst the hills.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 5. Arg.

By wells and rills, in meadows green,

We nightly dance our hey-day guise.

Old Song of Robin Goodfellow.

HEY'WARD.* See HAYWARD.

HIA'TION. n. s. [from hio, Lat.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIA'TUS. n. s. [hiatus, Lat.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatuses are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it.

Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself.

Pope.

HIBE'RNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIBE'RNIAN.* n. s. [hibernus, from Hibernia, the Latin name of Ireland; Hibernie, old French; hibernia, Sax;]

adopted, according to some, from Iberia, and the Iberi, in Spain; according to others from the Celt. ibh, ivar, denoting western.] An Irishman.

There is one Hibernian, whose mind is superior to the general delusion, as his talents and erudition are superior to the antiquarian scribblers of the present day.

Campbell, Eccel. and Lit. Hist. of Irel. p. 260.

HIBE'RNIAN.* adj. Relating to Ireland.

HIBE'RNICISM.* n. s. [Lat. Hibernicus.] A mode of speech peculiar to natives of Ireland.

HICCIUS DOCTIUS.† n. s. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves. Dr. Johnson.—

The term is supposed to have arisen from the veneration in which the Roman Catholic priests were, in old times, held; the presence of whom, in the assemblies of the people, was announced with the words, hic est doctus! hic est doctus! See Brand's Popular Antiq. vol. ii. p. 417.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's-hall,
And hiccus doctus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes.

Hudibras.

HICCO'UGH.† n. s. [hicken, Danish. Dr. Johnson.—The orthography of this word is very unsettled; some writing hiccup; others, hiccough, hick, hichoc, and hicket. The last is French, hoquet; and base Latin, hoqueta.—Hick is both Danish and Belgick, and may be the British ig also; or may be an abbreviation of any of the rest. Hiccup, or hiccup, is the Belgick huckup, as hichoc is their hickhock. Hiccough is so given, because it seems to have something of the nature of a cough. Pegge.—From the Su. Goth. hicka, whence our old word yexing in the same sense.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supereragate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.
Sneezing cureth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown, Vulg. Err.
If the stomach be hurt, sigultus or hiccough follows.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To HI'CCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.]

To sob with convulsion of the stomach;

To HI'CKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup.

Hudibras.

HI'CKWALL.† } n. s. A bird; a kind of HI'CKWAY. } small woodpecker.

Chambers.

HID.† } part. pass. of hide. [Sax. hibb,
HI'DDEN.† } hibbe.]

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid.

Milton, P. L.

Other hidden cause

Left them superiour. Milton, P. L.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;

God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

HID'DENLY.* adv. [from hidden.] Privily; secretly. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HID'AGE.* n. s. [from hide.] A tax formerly laid on every hide of land.

HIDALGO.* n. s. [Spanish.] One of noble birth.

Of all the miseries which he had endured, this was the greatest; that he, an hidalgo, a gentleman of Spain, should live to become a servant.

Terry, Voyage to East Ind. (1655), p. 169.

TO HIDE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hiban, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avant, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates, And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews' fates. Dryden.

Thus the sire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece;
The occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corpse a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection! Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is fill'd with peace. Rowe, Royal Convert.

TO HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:

Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,

Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE AND SEEK. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

HIDE.† n. s. [hybe, Sax.; haude, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child?

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [hide, hyde, Fr.; hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till; hida, hybe, Saxon. "When the realm was first divided into hides, a hide contained 100 acres, that is, 120 according to English measure. —The just value of a hide, that might fit the whole kingdom, never appears from Domesday; and was ever of an uncertain quantity." Kelham on Domesday Book, p. 231.]

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOU'ND.† adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

To blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hidebound humour, which he calls his judgement. Milton, Arcopaglica.

And still the harsher and hidebound
The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.

In detestation of the former, whom they observe to be often absurd and unreasonable, but always hidebound and fantastical. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious.

He hath wealth; yet he will scarce use it, though to purchase his own health; but sterves his poor hidebound carcass, and impoverisheth his body to enrich his purse. Stafford's Niobe, (1611), P. i. p. 91.

Hath my purse been hidebound to my hungry brother? Quarles, Judg. & Mer. The Swearer.

Cares and sleepless nights tormented with continual lashings a hidebound miser.

Situation of Paradise, &c. (1683), p. 73.

HIDEOUS.† adj. [hideux, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—Perhaps from the Icel. heide, a desert, a wild frightful place. Our word at first was hidous: "So hidous is the shoure," i. e. dreadful. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself so to many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shakespeare, Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded death. Milton, P. L.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects: the following use is less authorised.

'Tis forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion. Spenser.

HIDEOUSLY.* adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself

To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare.

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HIDEOUSNESS.† n. s. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness; terrour.

Go anticly, and shew outward hideousness.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

She presented in her trusty glass

The faithful copy of my hideousness. Beaumont, Psych. (1651), p. 79.

HID'ER.† n. s. [from the verb.] One that hides. Sherwood.

HID'ING.* n. s. [from To hide.] Concealment; the act of withholding from sight. Sherwood.

There was the hiding of his power. Hab. iii. 4.

HIDING-PLACE.* n. s. A place of concealment.

Had they now known the world, and the hiding-places that are therein, they would have gone into the dens and rocks of the mountains. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 204.

TO HIE.† v. n. [hizan, hizan, Saxon; heya, Icel.; "Highe thou to come to me soone." Wicliffe, 2 Tim. iv. 9. In the present version, Do thy diligence. Spenser, in his early poetry, writes it high: "The night higheth fast, it's time to be gone." Shep. Cal.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Spenser, F. Q.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shaksp.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakespeare.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither far advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.

The snake no sooner hies'd,
But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd. Crashaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milt. P. L.

Thus he advis'd me, on you aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryd.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Crashaw.

HIE.* n. s. [from the verb. Yet retained in Yorkshire, according to Pegge:

"Make as much hie as you can."] Haste; diligence.

He—charged hem in hie
To shapen for his life some remedie. Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

HIERARCH.† n. s. [ἱερός and ἀρχή; hier-arque, French.]

1. The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heaven appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milt. P. L.

2. The chief of any establishment.

The politick learning of accommodating hierarchs, or statesmen.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. S.

HIERARCHAL.* adj. [from hierarchy.] Belonging to sacred government.

The great hierarchal standard was to move.

Milton, P. L.

HIERARCHICAL.† adj. [hierarchie, Fr.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

This epistle [of St. Paul to Titus] is one of the three, not unfitted styled the hierarchial epistles, "de statu ecclesiastico compositæ," as Tertullian speaks; being so many rescripts apostolical to Timothy, and Titus; (the one, desired by St. Paul to stay at Ephesus, primate of Asia; the other, left in Crete, metropolitan of that and the neighbour islands;) directing them, how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God, &c.

Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 1.

Bishop Hall was the defender of our hierarchial establishment. Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.

HIERARCHY. n. s. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd be from the rest.

Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heaven's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.

Milton, P. L.

The blesseddest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impoertuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her.

Howell, Voc. Forest.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

While the whole Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH.† } n. s. [hieroglyphe, HIEROGLYPHICK. } French; ἱερογλυφικός, sacred, and ἱερογλυφία, to carve.]

2. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

He gave her a kind expression, by a quaint device sent unto her in a rich jewel, fashioned much after the manner of the trivial hieroglyphis used in France, called "Rebus de Picardy."

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646), p. 115.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins, Dædalus.

Herodotus, holding the very same hieroglyph, speaks much plainer. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 3.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, HIEROGLYPHICK. } French, from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys, Travels.

The Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleaveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was be hieroglyphically of the sun. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGRAM.* n. s. [hierogramme, Fr. ἱερός, sacred, and γράμμα, letter.] A kind of sacred writing.

HIEROGRAMMATIC.* adj. [hierogrammatique, Fr. from hierogram.] Expressive of holy writing.

Clement adds to epistolick [writing] the hierogrammatic, which was alphabetick; but, being confined to the use of the priests, was not so well known. Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 3.

HIEROGRAMMATIST.* n. s. [Gr. ἱερογραμματής.] A writer of hieroglyphicks.

There were two sorts of languages and characters among the Egyptians; one common, and used by all, constituted for their trade and commerce with mankind, and which was that tongue or idiom called the Coptic or Pharonic; and the other used only by priests, prophets, hierogrammatists, or holy writers, and the like persons in sacerdotal orders.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 291.

HIEROGRAPHICAL.* } adj. [from hieroglyphical.]
HIEROGRAPHICK. } graphy.] Denoting sacred writing.

Apuleius describes the sacred book or ritual of the Egyptians as partly written in symbolic, and partly in these hieroglyphic characters of arbitrary institution. Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 3.

These [characters] were properly what the ancients call hieroglyphical. Ibid.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. s. [ἱερός and γραφία.] Holy writing.

HIEROLOGY.* n. s. [hierologie, Fr. ἱερός, and λόγος, Gr.] Discourse on sacred things.

HIEROMANCY.* n. s. [hieromancie, Fr. ἱερομαντεία, Gr.] Divination by sacrifices.

HIEROPHANT.† n. s. [ἱεροφάντης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hieropants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To come at the truth of his character, he was severely interrogated by the priest or hieropant. Warburton, Div. Leg. of Moses, ii. § 4.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from hagglegle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly; it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale.

Base thou art!

To higgle thus for a few blows,
To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse. Hudibras.
Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER.† n. s. [from higgle.] Dr. Johnson. — Some have considered it an alteration of eggler, a hawk who collects eggs, &c. for sale.] One who sells provisions by retail.

The Temple itself was profaned into a den of thieves, a rendezvous of higglers and drovers.

South, Serm. iii. 311.

HIGH.† adj. [Goth. hauh; Sax. heah, hiz, hih, superl. hægt; Dutch, hoog; whence the old Fr. hogue, height.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved. Bacon.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet, Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast.

Dryden.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul. Baster.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest; high sheriff; high steward; high bailiff; high constable.

Herod on his birth-day made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee.

St. Mark, vi. 21.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

Shakespeare.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know

To bear high fortune, or endure the low. Dryden.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon — aim'd not beyond
Higher design than to enjoy his state.

Milton, P. R.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things.

Shakespeare.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

Clarendon.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

Him that hath an high look, and a proud heart, I will not suffer.

Psalm ci. 5.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

Clarendon.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

Bacon.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me I am exceeding weary.

— I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked so high blood. — It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.

Shakspeare.

11. Strong; powerful.

The children of Israel went out with an high hand.

Exod. xiv. 8.

Thou hast a mighty arm; strong is Thy hand, and high is Thy right hand.

Psalm lxxxix. 13.

With an high arm brought He them out.

Acts, xiii. 17.

12. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast, Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost.

Denham.

Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind.

Dryden.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up In its full fury.

Addison, Cato.

13. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Nor only tears

Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise; high passions, anger, hate, Mistrust, suspicion, discord, and shook sore Their inward state of mind.

Milton, P. L.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment show, Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

She had from her infancy discovered so imperious a temper, usually called a high spirit.

Tatler, No. 231.

14. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now gan it wax for Una fair, To think of those her captive parents dear.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you? High time it is this war now ended were.

Spenser.

It was high time to do so; for it was now certain, that forces were already upon their march towards the West.

Clarendon.

It was high time for the lords to look about them.

Clarendon.

15. Raised to any great degree; as, high pleasure; high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

For Solomon, he liv'd at ease, and full Of honour, wealth, high fare.

Milton, P. R.

High sauces and spices are fetched from the Indies.

Baker.

16. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high to the North, or low to the South.

Abbot, Descript. of the World.

17. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered.

Gen. xxix. 7.

18. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week, is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets.

Brown.

19. Dear; exorbitant in price.

South.

20. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

21. Solemn; eminently observable.

That sabbath day was an high day.

St. John, xix. 31.

What hath this day deserved? what hath it done, That it in golden letters should be set, Among the high tides, in the calendar?

Shakspeare, K. John.

22. Loud; full; a musical term: "an high or shrill sound." Barret. See also the adverb, and On High.

There let the pealing organ blow, To the full-voic'd quire below, In service high, and anthems clear.

Milton, II Pens.

23. Zealous in the cause of others: as, he was high in the praise of him; he was a high man for the king.

24. A term applied, some time after the revolution, to the church; which was raised by the dissenters, in order to break the church party, by dividing the members into high and low; and the opinion raised, that the high joined with the papists, inclined the low to fall in with the dissenters.

Swift, Exam. No. 43.

The terms high church, and low church, as commonly used, do not so much denote a principle, as they distinguish a party. They are like words of battle, that have nothing to do with their original signification, but are only given out to keep a body of men together, and to let them know friends from enemies.

Addison, Tatler, No. 220.

He is said, by the author of the Biographia, to have declared himself of the party who had the honourable distinction of high churchmen.

Johnson, Life of Yalden.

High.* adv.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars Up to the fiery concave, towering high.

Milton, P. L.

1. Aloft.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

5. Profoundly; with great degrees of knowledge.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate.

Milton, P. L.

On High.† adv.

1. Above; aloft. Dr. Johnson gives high as a substantive, with the following example from Dryden; observing that the substantive, which he defines high place, elevation, is used only with from or on. It is evidently, however, only an adverb; and Dryden's from high merely an elliptical expression of from on high.

The windows from on high are open.

Isaiah, xxiv. 18.

The day-spring from on high hath visited us.

St. Luke, i. 78.

When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive.

Ephes. iv. 8.

The loud

Ethereal trumpet from on high can blow.

Milton, P. L.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high, He sigh'd.

Dryden.

2. Aloud. See the adjective and adverb HIGH. "Loud, on high, out aloud."

Huloet.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 16.

To HIGH.* To hasten. See To HIE.

HIGH.† Is much used in composition, with variety of meaning, Dr. Johnson says; but, as Mr. Mason has observed, the number of these compositions would be much diminished, if high were considered as an adverb, which it really is, and were for that reason printed as a separate word. Our poets, however, abundantly use it in composition, as the additions to such words, already given by Dr. Johnson, will show.

HIGH-AIMED.* adj. Having lofty or grand designs.

Thou, — for all

Thy high-aim'd hopes, gain'dst but a flaming fall.

So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,

Ad to belief may seem.

Milton, P. L.

HIGH-BLOWN.* adj. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,

These many summers on a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me,

Wearied, and old with service, to the mercy

Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

Shakspeare.

The park for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and browsings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 8.

HIGHT. † [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite tense, with a passive signification: hacan, to call, Saxon; heissen, German. Dr. Johnson.—This is not accurate. For, that it is not confined to the past tense, the laughable prologue alone in the Midsummer Night's Dream might prove; but it was formerly not uncommon in other forms of passive signification.]

1. Is called; is named; am named.

Now hight I Philostrate. Chaucer, Kn. Tale. Bright is her hew, and Geraldine she hight.

Ld. Surrey, Songs, &c. (1587.) fol. 5. b.

This grisly beast, which by name lion hight, The trusty Thisby, coming first by night, Did scare away, or rather did affright.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Spenser, F. Q.

Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer For crowling loud, the noble Chanticleer, So hight her cock. Dryden, Nun's Priest.

4. It is sometimes used as a participle passive: called; named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings, Dr. Johnson says; but Grose notices it as used in the North for called.

Amongst the rest a good old woman was,

High mother Hubbard. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

On parchment scraps yfed, and Wormius hight. Pope, Dunciad.

TO HIGHT.* v. a. [hahan, Sax.; heta, Su. Goth; haitan, ghaitan, M. Goth. to promise, and to command. At first, this word was written hete.]

1. To promise. Still used in Cumberland, according to Pegge.

He had hold his way, as he had hight.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

2. To entrust.

The gates stood open wide,

Yet charge of them was to a porter hight. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 6.

3. To command; to direct.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 8.

ON HIGHT.* adv. Aloud. See on HIGH. He — spake these same wordes all on hight.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

[He] with reproachful words him thus bespake on hight. Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 2.

HIGHTH.* n. s. [Sax. hiðh.] Height. See HEIGHT.

That to the hight of this great argument,

I may assert Eternal Providence. Mill, P. L.

The pillars or piers of the old building, which Wykeham made use of, were about sixteen feet in hight. Louth, Life of Wykeham (3d edit.) p. 197.

HIGHWATER. n. s. [high and water.] The utmost flow of the tide.

They have a way of draining lands that lie below the high-water, and are something above the low-water mark. Mortimer.

HIGHWAY. † n. s. [high and way. "As the Romans always elevated their public roads above the circumjacent country, by a causeway of stone, or else by earth thrown up, such roads came to be called by the name, which they have retained, of the highway." Blakeway's Hist. of Shrewsbury.]

1. Great road; publick path:

So few there be

That chase the narrow path or seek the right:

All keep the broad highway, and take delight

With many rather for to go astray. Spenser, F. Q.

Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appius, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator. Addison.

Entering on a broad highway,

Where power and titles scatter'd lay,

He strove to pick up all he found. Swift.

2. Figuratively, a train of action with apparent consequence.

I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose. Child on Trade.

HIGHWAYMAN. n. s. [highway and man.] A robber that plunders on the public roads.

'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley.

A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman, before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery. Swift.

HILARITY. † n. s. [hilaritas, Lat.] Merriment; gayety.

Cheer up the countenance, expel austerity, bring in hilarity. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 294.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incandescence and regulated estuation from wine. Brown.

HILARY Term.* [In law.] The term which begins on the twenty-third of January: Terminus Sancti Hilarii.

Cowel.

HILD. in Ælrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady; so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mathild, an heroic lady. Gibson.

HIL'DING. † n. s. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord; perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate. Hughes's Spenser. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke and Mr. Malone concur in deducing this word from the Sax. hýlan, to crouch, to bend down; and the former assimilates this derivation to that which he gives of coward, viz. the English cover. But that word of shame is the ancient French coward, which took its origin from coue, the tail, as the Italian codardo has from cauda, the same; and as the low Latin caudatus has been applied to the timid and pusillanimous. V. Du Cange.

1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.

He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen

The horse he rode on. Shakespeare.

If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect. Shakespeare.

A base slave,

A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;

Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakespeare.

This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,

And sets us all at naught. Rowe, Jane Shore.

HILL. † n. s. [hil, Sax. from the verb hylan, or helan, to cover. "Any heap of earth, or stone, &c. by which the plain or level surface of the earth is covered." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 382.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;

Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.

Jerusalem is seated on two hills,

Of hight unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,

The rest is easy, scant to rise eys'd;

But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:

So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill looks round to view.

Granville.
A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plastic virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

Cheyne.
To HILL.* v. a. [Sax. hılan; Goth. huljan, to cover. See To HELE.] To cover. A bed-hilling is a quilt or coverlet, in the north of England, according to Grose.

With the clothes of hir love
She hilled all hir bedde about.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. v.
Ye shall enquire yf there be oþy house in the warde, that is hyllid with any other thyng than tyle, or slat, or lede, for peryl of fire.

Arnold's Chron. sign. F. 5 b.
Those mountains

Hill'd with snow. Cureau, Poems, p. 145.

Bp. Hurd on the Proph. Sermon. xi.
HI'LLING.* n. s. [from To HILL.]

1. A covering: as, "the hylling of a house." Prompt. Parv. A bed-hilling. See To HILL.

2. An accumulation.

Cease then, all you that aim at the hilling up of fatal gold, and employ your hours in a more noble traffick.

Heuitt, Sermon. p. 41.
HI'LLOCK. n. s. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater: what, judge you, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus?

Sidney.
Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row helms, on hillocks green.

Milton, L' All.
This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison; on Italy.

HI'LLY.* adj. [from hill.]

1. Full of hills; unequal in the surface. Towards the hilly corners of Druida remain yet her very Aborigines, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

Howell.
Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Dryden.
Lo! how the Norick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights.

Philips.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would choose to travel through a plain one.

Addison.
2. Like a hill; lofty.

Better to have liv'd
Poor and obscure, and never scal'd the top
Of hilly empire, than to die with fear
To be thrown headlong down almost as soon
As we have reach'd it. Beaumont and Fletcher, Prothetess.

HILT. n. s. [hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns, and coronets.

Shakespeare.
Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.
Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze.

Pope, Odyssey.
HI'LTED.* adj. [from hilt.] Having a hilt; as, a silver-hilted sword.

HIM.* [him, Saxon; imma, Goth.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he hanged. Gen. xli.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him. Accidence.

3. Sometimes used for himself. Sweet touch, the engine that love's bow doth bend,

The sense wherewith he feels him deified.

Chapman, Ovid's Banquet, &c. (1595).
The hungry Tantal might have fill'd him now.

P. Fletcher, Purp. Isl. v. 64.

4. Him thought. An ancient form of speech of the same construction as methought; meaning, he thought.

When he [St. George] sawe the arraye of that damysell, him thought that it should be a woman of grete worth.

Lib. Festiv. sign. k. ij.
Him thought he heard the softly whistling wind.

Fairfax, Tass. xiii. 40.
Him thought he by the brook of Cherith stood.

Milton, P. R.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]
1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

Bacon.
With shame remembers, while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done.

Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again. Judges, iii. 19.
God himself is with us for our captain.

2 Chron. xiii. 12.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd
Above the clouds, as high as heaven himself.

Shakespeare.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David hid himself in the field. 1 Sam. xx. 24.

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set awork by a reproveable badness in himself.

Shakespeare.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy.

South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiab went another way by himself. 1 Kings, xviii. 6.

HIN. n. s. [hin, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

Exod. xxix. 40.

HIND. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost. [hynban, Saxon.] Backward;

contrary in position to the face; as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,

And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore

Pope.

HIND. n. s. [hinbe, Saxon, from hinnu, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he slew, with glancing dart amiss,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life. Spenser, F. Q.

Canst thou mark when the hinds do calve? Job, xxxix. 1.

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he slew.

Dryden.

2. [hine, Sax.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul clothes, to Datchet-lane. Shakespeare.

3. [hineman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield

Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,
And sheets of lightning blast the standing field.

Dryden.

He cloth'd himself in coarse array,
A labouring hind in shew. Dryden, Fob.

HI'NDBERRIES.* n. s. [himbepman.] The same as raspberries. The Saxon word has been wrongly interpreted by Lye fragum. Craven Dialect.

To HI'NDER.* v. a. [hinþman, Sax. hinderen, Dutch; probably from the Goth. hindar, behind.] To obstruct; to stop;

to let: to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way. Gen. xxiv. 56.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wisdom, xvii. 20.

If the alms were hindered only by entreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because entreaty took not liberty away from the giver.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Solitude damps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing.

Temple.
What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right. Locke.

To HI'NDER v. n. To raise hinderances; to cause impediment.

You minims of *hinder*ing knot-grass made.

Shakespeare.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commander, enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written.

Dryden.

HI'NDER. adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face:

opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.

Sidney.
As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

Addison.

HI'NDERANCE. n. s. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction; with of, sometimes with to before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions more pernicious than the first; yea most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

Hooker.
They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance.

Hooker.
What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done?

Dryden.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hind'rance in pursuit of love?

Dryden.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hindrances out of the way that leads to justice.

Atterbury.

HINDERENDS.* n. s. pl. Refuse of corn; such as remains after it is winnowed. A northern word. Praise of Yorksh. Ale. Craven Dial. & Brockett.

HINDERER.† n. s. [from hinder.] One or that which hinders or obstructs.

Not enterprising to run afore, and so by their rashness become the greatest hinders of such things, as they more arrogantly than godly would seem, by their own private authority, most hotly to set forward.

K. Edward VI. Proc. before the Order of Commun. (1547).

A coadjutor commonly proves an hinderer; and by his envious clashing, both often dig his partner's grave.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 273.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow.

May.

HINDERLING.† n. s. [from hind or hinder.] Dr. Johnson gives no example of the word; and Mr. H. Tooke, in his remarks on hilding, (Div. Parl. ii. 315.) doubts the existence of hinderling.] A paltry, worthless, hinder animal.

From this root [hind] comes the Anglo-Saxon hineþing, properly one who comes far behind his ancestors, familia sua opprobrium. In Legibus Edw. Confess. c. 35. "Occidentales Saxonici habent in proverbio summi despectus hinderling, i. e. omni honestate dejecta et recedens imago;" the scandal of his family.

Callander's Two Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 56.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Genesis.

Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

Shakespeare.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Deut. xxv. 18.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gamester.

Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, bell—he said, and run.

Pope.

HINDOO.* n. s. [Persian. "Hindoo for the people, and Hindustan for the country, now generally used by natives and foreigners, were probably given them by their neighbours the Persians. The river improperly called the Indus is quite out of the question, either as giving a name to the country, as many have imagined, or borrowing one from it, according to the opinion of the late Alexander Dow, Esq. in the dissertation prefixed to his Hist. of Indostan, p. xxxi. l. 12.; who in the same page asserts, that "the Hindoos are so called from Indoo or Hindoo, which in the Sanscrita language signifies the Moon." It is true that eendoo is one of the names of the moon, but not hindoo. Let it suffice, that there are such words as Hindoo, or Hindustan, in the Sanskreet language. In Persian we find hind for the country, and hindoo for the people." Wilkins's Heetopades, 1787, p. 332.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

The British laws may, in some degree, be softened and tempered by a moderate attention to the peculiar and national prejudices of the Hindoo.

Haled, Code of Gentoo Laws, Pref.

HINDRANCE.* See HINDERANCE.

HINGE.† n. s. [or hingle, from hangle or hang. Dr. Johnson. — I believe no one ever before saw or heard of hingle and hangle. All the three words, however, are merely the past participle of the verb hangan, to hang. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 358. — Mr. Tooke might have found, "hinge or hingell" in Barret's Alveary, 1580. Skinner and others have also deduced this word from the verb hang. In Scotland hing is still used for hang; and Pegge says, in the north of England also.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate

Of heaven arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Milton, P. L.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,

And where the way they cannot find, they force.

Denham.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

2. The cardinal points of the world, East, West, North, and South.

Nor slept the winds

Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world. Milton, P. R.

If when the moon is in the hinge at East,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Creech, Manilius.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue.

Temple.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted.

Tillotson.

Me thinks we stand on ruins, Nature shakes
About us, and this universal frame
So loose, that it but wants another push
To leap from off its hinges.

Dryden.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as an hinge.

Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap.

Shakespeare.

To HINGE.* v. n. To turn as upon a hinge; to hang: as, the settlement of the matter hinges upon this point.

HINGE.* adj. Active; supple; pliant. Wilbraham's Cheshire Glossary.

To HINNIMATE.* v. n. [Latin, hinnio.] To HINNY. } To neigh. Cockeram.

He neigheth and hinnieth; all is but hinnying sophistry.

B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

To HINT.† v. a. [enter, to implant, Fr. Skinner and Dr. Johnson. — From the hand. Serenius. — From the Norm. Sax. hence, to take hold on any thing. Rev. Mr. Lemon. — From hentan, to take hold of; hint being something taken. Mr. H. Tooke.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

For examples out of other histories to hint a few of them.

South, Sermon, i. 289.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike.

Pope.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul.

Thomson.

To HINT at. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem.

Addison, on the Georgicks.

HINT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the still stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart.

South, Sermon.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

Upon this hint I spake;

She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd'd.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them.

Addison.

HIP.† n. s. [Goth. hup; Dutch, huppe; Sax. hipe. pipe-baner-ece, the sciatica, or hip gout.]

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Shakespeare.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

So shepherds use

To set the same mark on the hip
Both of their sound and rotten sheep.

Hudibras.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And ranch'd his hip with one continu'd wound.

Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip.

Shakespeare, Othello.

4. Hip and Thigh. A phrase used in our present version of the Bible, and sometimes in conversation, denoting perhaps complete overthrow.

He smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter.
Sampson hip and thigh, pell-mell, haply with his leg and foot only, slew the Philistines with a great slaughter.

Judges, xv. 8.

Ep. Richardson on the O. Testament, p. 66.

HIP. n. s. [from heopa, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogrose.

Eating hips and drinking watery foam.

Spenser, Hobb. Tele.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shaksp.
Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To HIP. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd. Shaksp.

HIP. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin eho, heus!

Ainsworth.

To HIPE. v. n. To push with a head.

Praise of Yorkshire Ale. Grose hence observes, that "an ox, apt to push with his horns, is said to hype." He adds, that this northern word, when applied to a person, as, "to hype, or hipe at one,"
means to make mouths at or affront one.

HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poets cares;
One foot the sock, t' other the buskin wears:
Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't,
Like Volcuis hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP. † adj. A corruption of hypocon-
HIP. † drack. Ainsworth.

I fancy you are a little hippish; and, I hope,
you fright yourself without any reason.

Graves, Spirit. Quire, B. 9. ch. 12.

HIP'PED. adj. [from the corrupt word hip.] Melancholy.

To some coffee-house I stray
For news, the manna of a day;
And from the hipp'd discourses gather,
That politics go by the weather.

Green's Spleen, p. 10.

HIP'HALT. adj. [hip and halt.] Lame.

See HIPSHOT.

Vulcanus of whom, I spake,
He had a courbe upon the back,
And thereto he was hippe-halte.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

HIP'PINS. n. s. pl.

1. Stepping stones over a brook. [contracted from the Teut. hippelen.] Craven Dialect.

2. Children's cloths; a kind of towel: a clout. Common in the north of England.

HIP'POCAMP. n. s. [ἵπποκάμπος, Gr.; hip- pocampe, Fr.] A sea-horse.

Jove's bright lamps

Guiding from rocks her chariot's hippocamps.

Brown.

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. s. [ἵπποκένταυρος; hip- pocentaure, French.] A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimæras to be imaged, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion?

Dryden.

HIPPOCRASS. n. s. [hypocras, French; quasi vinum Hippocratis.] A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocrass, the wine,
Wassail the bowl, with ancient ribbons fine. King.

HIPPOCRATES'S Sleeve. n. s. A woollen bag made by joining the two opposite angles of a square piece of flannel, used to strain syrups and decoctions for clarification. Quincy.

HIPPOCRATISM. n. s. [from Hippocrates.]
The philosophy of Hippocrates, applied to the science of medicine; or the doctrine of Hippocrates, considered with regard to the means of prolonging life.

Chambers.

HIPPODAME. n. s. [ἵπποδάμης, Gr.; hip- popotame, Fr. Spenser has departed from analogy in writing hippodame.] A sea-horse.

Infernal hags, centaurs, fiends, hippodames.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 50.

That his swift chariot might have passage wyde,
Which four great hippodames did draw, in tenewise tyde. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 40.

HIPPODROME. n. s. [ἵππος, a horse, and δρόμος, a course, Gr.; hippodrome, Fr.]
A course for chariot and horse races, or exercises.

Within the hippodrome many of the cavalry used to ride. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 162.

Stukely supposes these two banks to have formed the ground for a British hippodrome, or horse-race. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 70.

HIPPOGRIF. † n. s. [ἵππος and γρύψ; hip- pogriffe, French.] A winged horse; a being imagined by Ariosto.

He caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff bore through the air sublime.

Milton, P. R.

A centaur, hippogriff, and a flying dragon, are things that were never seen.

Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 165.

HIPPOPO'TAMUS. n. s. [ἵππος and πόταμος.]
The river horse. An animal found in the Nile.

HIPSHOT. † adj. [hip and shot.] Sprained or dislocated in the hip.

The field this hip-shot grammarian cannot set into right frame of construction, neither here in the similitude, nor in the following reddition thereof. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hip-shot? says the goose to the gosling. L' Etrangere.

HIPWORT. n. s. [hip and wort.] A plant.

Ainsworth.

HIR.  [Sax. hýpa, of them.]* In our old language is their.

To HIRE. † v. a. [hýpan, Saxon; from the Cymr. hur, merces. Serenius.]

1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.

His sordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the jakes. Dryden, Juv.

2. To engage a man to temporary service for wages.

They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Isaiah, xli. 6.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves. Shakspere.

3. To bribe.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. To engage for pay; with the reciprocal word.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased.

1 Sam. ii. 5.

5. To let; to set for a time at a certain price. This, to prevent ambiguity, has sometimes the particle out; as, he hired out his house to strangers. Dr. John- son.—This sense seems to be the primary one; at least, it is very ancient.

A man plauted a vineyard, and set an hegge about it, and dalt a lake, and bildid a tour, and hired it to tillers, [in the present version, let it out.]
Wicliffe, St. Mark, xii. 1.

HIRE. n. s. [hýpe, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.

2. Wages paid for service.

Great thanks and goodly meed to that good sire,
He, thence departing, gave for his pains' hire.
Spenser, F. Q.

I have five hundred crowns,

The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father. Shaks.

Though little was their hire, and light their gain,

Yet somewhat to their share he threw. Dryden.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame.

Dryden.

HIRELESS. adj. [hire and less.] Without hire; not rewarded; not recompensed; not expecting hire.

Your misbelief my hireless value scorn.

Davenant, Gondibert, i. 3.

Poetry,

Oh hireless science, and of all alone

The liberal; meanly the rest each state

In pension treats; but this depends on none.

Davenant, Gondibert, ii. 5.

HIRELING. n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who serves for wages.

The hiring longs to see the shades descend,

That with the tedious day his toil might end,

And he his pay receive. Sandys.

In the framing of Hiero's ship there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other *hiring*s for carriages. Wilkins, Dædal.

'Tis frequent here to see a freeborn son

On the left hand of a rich hiring run. Dryd. Juv.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now she shades thy evening walk with bays,

No hiring she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.

HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew
Of hiring mourners for his funeral due. Dryden.

HIRER. n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who uses any thing, paying a recompence; one who employs others, paying wages.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

To HIRPLE.  See To HERPLE.*

To HIRSL.  v. n.* [Teut. erselen, cessimire, tergiversari.] To move about. Craven Dial.

HIRST.  See HURST.*

HIRSUTE. † adj. [hirsutus, Lat.]

1. Rough; rugged; shaggy.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirsute roots:
the hirsute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An hirsute beggar's brat, that lately fed on scraps. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Their bodies, that are affected with this universal melancholy, are most part black;—hirsute they are and lean. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 201.

2. Of coarse manners; of rough behaviour.

He looked elderly, and was cynical and hirsute in his behaviour. Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

HIRSU'TENESS. n. s. [from hirsute.]
Hairiness.

Leanness, hirsuteness, broad veins, much hair on the brows, &c. shew melancholy.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 58.

HIS. † pronoun possessive. [hyr, Saxon;
i. e. he's.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes us fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulph.

Shakespeare, Hen. 7.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Heav'n and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid;
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us.

Shakespeare.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his.

Locke.

When'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his.

Addison.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Not the dreadful spout,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shaks.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted. Dr. Johnson.—"Christ his sake," in our liturgy, is a mistake either of the printers, or of the compilers. "My paper is the Ulysses his bow, in which every man of wit or learning may try his strength." Addison, Guard. No. 98. This is no slip of Mr. Addison's pen: he gives us his opinion upon this point very explicitly in another place. "The same single letter [s] on many occasions," says Addison, "does the office of a whole word, and represents the his and her of our forefathers." Spect. No. 135. "The latter instance," Lowth observes, "might have shewn him, how groundless this notion is: for it is not easy to conceive, how the letter s added to a feminine noun should represent the word her, any more than it should the word their added to a plural noun; as, the children's bread. But the direct derivation of this case from the Saxon genitive case is sufficient of itself to decide this matter." Lowth, Introduct. to Eng. Grammar.

Where is this Mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.

By thy fond consort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaks.

5. Anciently before self.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To HISS.* v. n. To breathe short through cold or pain; to draw the breath with difficulty. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

HI'SPID.* adj. [old Fr. hispid; Lat. hispidus.] Rough.

John of the wilderness? the hairy child?
The hispid Thishbite? or what Satyr wild?

More, Verses pref. to Hall's Poems, 1646.

To HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing hot. Shakespeare.

The merchants shall hiss at thee, Ezek. xxvii. 36.
See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair.

Dryden, Alexander's Feast.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a public exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

To Hiss. v. a. [hīcan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing, to explode.
Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace.

Eccles. xxii. 1.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hiss'd off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hiss'd off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hiss'd out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I
Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shaks. Macbeth.

HISS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

He would have spoke,
But hiss for hiss return'd with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, P. L.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of public scorn! Milton, P. L.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

HI'SSING.* n. s. [from hiss.]

1. The noise of a serpent, and of some other animals.

Being scared with beasts that passed by, and hissing of serpents, they died for fear. Wisd. xvii. 9.

2. An object of hisses or disgrace.

To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head. Jerem. xviii. 16.

HI'SSINGLY.* adv. [from hissing.] With whistling sound. Sherwood.

HIST.† interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some have thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, hush! hist; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence. Dr. Johnson.—Others suppose it to be the Latin interjection of silence, st; considered as an abbreviation of sta, stand, or of siste, stop. But it is most probably from our own word whist, be silent; whist, huist, hist. See To WHIST.] An exclamation commanding silence.

The mute Silence hist along,
'Less Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night.

Milton, Il Pens.

Hist, hist, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismsals coming.

Swift.

HISTORIAL.* adj. [historial, Fr.] Our elder word for historical.

An historical thing notable.

Chaucer, Doct. of Phys. Tale.

HISTORIAN. n. s. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine

Historian! Milton, P. L.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians.

Not added years on years my task would close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr.]

HISTORICK. } historicus, Lat.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet, Theory.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brass. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]

In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope, Essay on Homer.

HI'STORIED.* adj. [from history.] Recorded in history; containing history.

See STORIED.

HISTORIER.* n. s. [from history.] An old word for an historian.

Huntingdoniensis, doctor Poyntet's historier, reporteth of priests' marriages.

Martin on the Marr. of Priests, (1554), M. ii.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HISTORIO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ιστορία and γραφω; historiographie, French.] An historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

HISTORIO'GRAPHY. n. s. [ιστορία and γραφω.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORIO'LOGY. n. s. [ιστορία, and λογία, description, discourse.] Knowledge of history; explanation of history.

Cockeram.

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Caesar scorns the poet's lays;

It is to history he trusts for praise.

Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room.

Wiseman.

What histories of toil could I declare?

But still long-weary'd nature wants repair.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the Bible, is necessary to divines.

Watts.

HISTORY Piece. n. s. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place.

Pope.

HISTORION.* n. s. [Fr. historion; Lat. historio.] A player.

Cockeram.

HISTORIO'NICAL.† adj. [Fr. historionique, HISTORIO'NICK. } from the Lat. historio.] Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

A historionical contempt

Of what a man fears most.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Historionical gestures, representing unto us Apollo's solemnities in his temple at Delos.

Peter Smart, Sermon at Durham, (1628), p. 24.

Such naked and forlorn Quakers at a part much more cunning, false, and historionical, than those that least affect such pitiful simplicities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 164.

Nor may this be called an historionike parada, or stately visard and hypocrisy.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 163.

Though the world be historionical, and most men live ironically, yet be thou what thou singly art, and personate only thyself.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 20.

In consequence of his love and his knowledge of the historion art, he taught the choristers over which he presided to act plays.

Warlton, Hist. E. P. iii. 285.

HISTORIO'NICALY. adv. [from historionical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

HISTORIONISM.* n. s. [from historion.] Theatrical or feigned representation.

When personations shall cease, and historionism of happiness be over; when reality shall rule.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 24.

To HIT.† v. a. [from ictus, Lat. Minshew; from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius. From the Su. Goth. hitta, ferire, attingere. Spegel.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived.

Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly.

South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hitteth he so right?

Sidney.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand.

South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail: used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him.

Shakespeare.

Search every comment that your care can find, Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind.

Roscommon.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns.

Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!

Whose saintly visage is too bright

To hit the sense of human sight. Milton, Il Pens.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait; to touch properly.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him.

Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs.

Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he thought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes.

Spenser.

To HIT.† v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?

Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with metallic corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Of expectation fails, and most oft there

Where most it promises; and oft it hits

Where hope is coldest, and despair most sits.

Shakespeare.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

But thou bring'st valour too and wit, Two things that seldom fail to hit.

Hudibras.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible.

Dryden.

All human race would fain be wits, And millions miss for one that hits.

Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd, Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;

There lies my grief.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it.

Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg.

L'Estrange.

None of them hit upon the art.

Addison.

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design.

Bentley.

5. To agree; to suit.

Pray you, let us hit together. Shaks. K. Lear.
The number so exactly hits.

Waterland, Script. Vind. iii. 6.

HIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd, And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd.

Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity.

Glanville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgement, but a lucky hit.

South.

But with more lucky hit than those That use to make the stars depose.

Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail.

L'Estrange.

If casual concurrence did the world compose, And things and hits fortuitous arose, Then any thing might come from any thing; For how from chance can constant order spring?

Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?

Shakespeare.

These hits of words a true poet oft finds, without seeking.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

If at first he minds his hits, And drinks champagne among the wits, Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses.

Prior.

To HITCH.† v. n. [Skinner derives this word from the Sax. hezan, hican, which means to strive, or from the French hacher, to move quickly; to which Dr. Johnson assents, defining our word accordingly "to catch, to move by jerks;" but, at the same time, observing that he knows not where it is used but in the following passage from Pope, nor well knows what it there means. The word, however, is used by South; as more than one literary friend has remarked to me, and as I had noted several years since. Dr. Jamieson, illustrating the Scottish verb hatch, (to move quickly up and down, or backwards and forwards in a clumsy manner," says, that our hitch is used in the same way; although it is a word occurring so rarely, that Johnson could find but one example. To Skinner's etymons he adds the Icel. hika, cedo, recedo, retrocedo, which he considers as the radical word; and Serenius had proposed hagga, to move, to shake; hik, a small motion. — But hitch, in the passage from South, seems to mean to become "entangled or hooked together," and, in that from Pope, "to be hooked in, to fall into, to be caught, and exposed as it were;" and so may be deduced from the same root as to hook, Teut. haecken. Hichel, (or hitchel), a hook. Barret's Alv. 1580. To hitch, to catch hold of any thing with a rope or hook. Coles, Dict. edit. 1685. This is still a sea term; "hitch the fish-hook to the fluke of the anchor." In Gloucestershire, Mr. Malone says, to hitch is used actively in the sense of to make fast; and, as a neutral verb, to stick fast. Thus, after a swing-gate has vibrated backwards and forwards for some time, when the latch drops into the groove made to receive it, the gate is said to hitch. The word has other provincial meanings. Nor is hitch, in the sense of to hook on, or to fasten as with a hook, uncommon in many places. And from the active sense, thus implying hold, has arisen probably the use of the substantive for an impediment.]

1. To become entangled, or hooked together. ["Elementa hamata, et perplicata." Lucret.]

But if this will not do, we are told, that there was an infinite innumerable company of little bodies, called atoms, from all eternity, flying and roving about in a void space, which at length hitched together and united; by which union and connection they grew at length into this beautiful, curious, and most exact structure of the universe. A conceit fitter for Bedlam than a school, or an academy. South, Serm. iii. 90.

2. To be caught; to fall into; to be hooked in.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song.

Pope, Imit. of Hor. B. 2. Sat. I.

3. [Spoken of horses.] To hit the legs together in going. Scott.

4. To hop on one leg. Yorkshire. Grose. And so Dr. Johnson defines "to hobble" to hitch. See To HOBBLE.

5. To move, or walk. Norfolk. Grose. HITCH. n. s. [from the verb.] A catch; any thing that holds; an impediment: as, there is a hitch in the business; the man has a hitch in his gait.

I am credibly informed, that there is still a considerable hitch or hobble in your enunciation; and that when you speak fast, you speak unintelligibly. Ld. Chesterfield.

To HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. s. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE. n. s. [hyðe, Saxon.] 'A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER.† adv. [hidre, Goth. hibep, hibep, Sax.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion, hither came.

Spenser, F. Q.

Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their coming hither.

Shakespeare.

Who brought me hither,

Will bring me hence; no other guide I seek.

Milton, P. R.

2. It is used in opposition; hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topic of argument: [huc, Lat. Huc refer exitum.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God.

Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit.

Tillotson.

HITHER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.

After these,

But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighbouring hills descended.

Milton, P. L.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely, that extreme wherein it is finite.

Hale.

HITHERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is eternal can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme.

Hale.

HITHERTO. adv. [from hither.]

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem.

Dryden.

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancients
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, though they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying.

Milton, S. A.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces every day beheld
The graceful youth.

Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns.

Dryden.

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands.

Swift.

HITHERWARD. } adv. [hyðeppæpð, Sax.] This way; towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A puissant and mighty power
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakespeare.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton, S. A.

HIVE.† n. s. [hype, Saxon; either from the Su. Goth. hof, a house; or the M. Goth. haban, Icel. hefa, to contain; or the Sax. hipe, Icel. hiu, a house; a family. Serenius.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,

Are from their hives and houses driv'n away.

Shakespeare.

So wandering bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive.

Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives:
their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns.

Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down.

Shakespeare.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissension happens, the going off is to this day called swarming.

Swift.

To HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving.

Dryden.

When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to an habitation.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Cleveland.

To HIVE. v. n. To take shelter together; to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day

More than the wild cat, drones hive not with him,
Therefore I part with him.

Shakespeare.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities.

Pope, Lett.

HIVER. n. s. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hiver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith.

Come hissing in upon them. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HIZZING.* n. s. An hissing or hiss. See HISSING.

Lest, by the sun the organs parch'd and spill'd,
The dismal ghost uncertain hizzings yield.

May, Lucan, B. 6.

HO.† interj. [eho, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Ho, old French; stop, cease; the word made use of for combatants to leave off fighting. Kelham, Norm. Dict. Ho, Welsh, an exclamation, a call.] A call; a sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else ; a command to stop ; cease ; give over ; enough.

The duke of Norfolk was not fullie set forward, when the king cast down his warder, and the heralds cried ho, ho. Holinshed, Chron.

The sacke without botome, which never can say ho.

Myrrour of Good Manners, tr. by A. Barclay, s. d.
There be three things never satisfied, and the fourth never said ho.

Florio's Dialog. Ital. & Eng. (1578.)
Behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by ; unto whom he said, Ho, such a one, turn aside, sit down here. Ruth, iv. 1.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. Isaiah, lv. 1.

Ho, ho, come forth and flee from the land of the north. Zech. ii. 6.

What noise there, ho? Shakespeare.
Ho, swain, what shepherd owns these ragged sheep? Dryden.

Ho.* n. s. [from the interjection.] Stop ; bound ; limit. Formerly the word was common in this country. Mr. Malone says, it is yet common in Ireland : as, there is no ho with him, i. e. he knows no bounds, he never has enough, he is intemperate. " Out of all ho." Immodicè. Litt. Dict. 1715.

Heer was no ho in devout drinking:

Langham's Lett. of Q. Eliz. Entert. at Killingworth, (1575.)

To rule unruly people, with whom otherwise there were no ho.

Harvey, Pierce's Supererog. (1592.)

He once loved the fair maid of Presingfield out of all ho. Greene's Friar Bacon.

To Ho.* v. n. To call out. An old sear-term. " Howen, or cryen, as shipmen." Pr. Parv. " Clamor nauticus vel cantus, ut, heve & howe, rombylow." Ort. Vocab. [Teut. hou.] See Hox.

HOA.† interj. [from ho.] A sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else.

Here dwells my father Jew : hoa, who's within? Shakespeare.

When I cried hoa!

Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,
Your will. Shakespeare.

HO'ANE.* n. s. [Sax. hæn ; Icel. heim. See HONE.] A fine kind of whetstone. Cockeram.

HOAR.† adj. [hap, Sax. from hapian, canescere. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. White.

The hoare waters from his frigot ran,
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 10.

A people,
Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forrests hoare. Fitzfat.

Sunning his treasure hoare.

A hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. Arg. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

HOAR.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Antiquity ; hoariness.

His grants are engrafed on the publick law of Europe, covered with the awful hoar of innumerable ages. Burke.

To HOAR.* v. n. [Sax. hapian, mucescere.] To become mouldy or musty.

A hare that is hoar,
Is too much for a score,
When it hoars ere it be spent. Old Song in Romeo and Juliet.

HOAR-FROST. n. s. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground. Exod. xvi. 14.

In Farenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is hoar-frost. Arbutnot.

HOARD.† n. s. [haurd, Goth. hopb, Sax. from hyrda, Icel. to keep, to guard. Serenius. And Mr. H. Tooke states it to be the past participle of the Sax. hýpan, custodire. It may be added, that in the Persones Tale of Chaucer, horde (as hoard was formerly written) is used for the place to keep treasure in. " Glotonie — is the devil's horde ; ther he hideth him and resteth." Chaucer, C. T. edit. Tyrwhitt, ii. 359.] A store laid up in secret ; a hidden stock ; a treasure.

I have a venturous fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee hence new nuts. Shakespeare.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodward.

To HOARD.† v. n. [Sax. hopban.] To make hoards ; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed. Spenser, F. Q.

Happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell. Shakespeare.

To HOARD. v. a.

1. To lay in hoards ; to husband privily ; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love ! Shakespeare.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the public spend the rich produce. Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money ; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbutnot, Art of Politic. Lying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the participle up.

I have, just occasion to complain of them, who because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,
Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden.

HO'ARDER.† n. s. [Sax. hopbepe.] One that stores up in secret.

The hoarders of provision were constrained to open their garners, and the prices of grain abated. Wotton, Panegyry, to K. Charles I.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

HO'ARED.* adj. [from hoar.] Mouldy ; musty.

All the bread of their provision was dry and hoared, [in the present version, mouldy].

Josh. ix. 5. Matthew's, Cranmer's, and the Bishops' Transl.

HO'ARHOUND.† n. s. [marrubium, Lat.]. A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness : it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause ; but it is now little used. Hill.

Pale hoarhound, which he holds of most especial use. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HO'ARINESS.† n. s. [from hoary.]

1. The state of being whitish ; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryden.

2. Mouldiness. Barret, and Sherwood.
Hoariness, or vinevoodness, such as is on bread or meat long kept ; or mouldiness from moisture or lack of cleansing. Barret.

HOARSE.† adj. [hap, Sax. heersch, Dutch.]. Having the voice rough, as with a cold ; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.
— Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shakespeare, As you like it.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooes, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson.

HO'ARSELY.† adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

Hard at my feet ran down a crystal spring,
Which did the cumbrous pebbles hoarsely chide
For standing in the way. More, Cupid's Conflict, (1647.)

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd ;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

HO'ARSENESS. n. s. [from hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarse-ness or viscous phlegm. Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had damp'd it to a hoarse-ness. Dryden, K. Arthur.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions hoarse-ness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HO'ARY.† adj. [hap, hapunz, Saxon. See HOAR.]

1. White ; whitish.
One would think the deep to be hoary. Job, xli. 32.

The secrets of the hoary deep. Milton, P. L.
Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or grey with age.

A comely palmer clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey.

Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better?

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty. [hopuz, Sax. See the fourth sense of HOAR.]

There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, mouldered bread.

HO'ASED.* See HOOSE.

HO'AST.* n. s. A cough. See HAUST.

HOAX.* n. s. [Such is the Sax. hucce, or hucx, derision, mockery, irony; though Mr. Malone considers it as derived from the cant word hocus, a cheat. Lambarde calls the Sax. hucxtybe, a time of scorning and mocking. From the Lambeth book, cited by Mr. Brand, under the years 1556-1557, there appear receipts for hoxce-money. The Sax. hocep, hucop, also signified scorn, laughing to scorn, or contumely; and Chaucer's "wife of Simkin" is described "ful of hoker and bismare," (i. e. insolence or mockery, and of abuse.) Reve's Tale.] An imposition; a deception; as, the hoax was credited beyond expectation.

To HOAX.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive; to impose upon.

HOAB.* n. s.

1. A clown. [German, hube, formerly hobe, a country-farm; hubner, a country fellow. Serenius.]

2. A fairy; a spirit. See HOBGOBLIN.

3. The back of the chimney. A northern term. Grose. See HOBNOB.

HOAB or NOB.* See HOBNOB.

HO'UBARD-DE-HOY.* n. s. [in some places called hobbedehoy, and also hobbety-hoy.] A stripling; a young lad between fourteen and twenty-one; neither man nor boy.

Man's age divided here ye have
By friendships from birth to grave.
The first seven years bring up as a child:
The next to learning, for waxing too wilde;
The next keeps under Sir Hobbard-de-hoy:
The next a man, no longer a boy, &c.

Tusser, Husbandrie, &c. (1580,) p. 57.

HO'BBISM.* n. s. The opinions of Thomas Hobbes of Malmesbury, in this country, who was born towards the close of the sixteenth century. He "made no scruple to speak of the light and law of nature as a chimera; and as little, to mould Christianity to a system of his own, directly repugnant to the nature and end of all religion; for he establishes it as a fundamental point, that the subjects of every community ought to conform, in all religious matters, to the commands of the civil magistrate. To this he added a frightful picture of human nature, representing mankind as altogether selfish and savage." Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. viii. "His ethics have a strong tendency to corrupt our morals, and his politics to destroy that liberty which is the birthright of every human creature. He is commonly represented as a sceptic in religion, and a dogmatist in philosophy; but he was a dogmatist in both." Granger, Biog. Hist. Charles II. Cl. ix.

The abettors of Hobbsism could not stand up for it, without allowing themselves to be actuated only by base and narrow principles.

Skelton, Deism Revealed.

HO'BBIST.* n. s. A follower of the opinions of Hobbes.

That Rochester should write a satire on man, I am not surprized. It is the business of the libertine to degrade his species, and debase the dignity of human nature, and thereby destroy the most efficacious incitements to lovely and laudable actions. But, that a writer of Boileau's purity of manners should represent his kind in the dark and disagreeable colours he has done, with all the malignity of a discontented Hobbsist, is a lamentable perversion of fine talents, and is a real injury to society.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To HO'BBLE.* v. n. [to hop, to hopp, to hobble. Dr. Johnson. — The diminutive of the Su. Goth. hoppa, to hop, to leap; so hopp, hobben, Teut.; hobbelu, Cym. the same. Serenius.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and encumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryd.
Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through.

Addison.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling?

Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to verses, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans — had a custom of reproaching each other in a sort of extempore poetry, or rather tunable hobbling verse.

Dryden, Orig. and Pr. of Satire.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse.

Prior.

To HO'BBLE.* v. a. [perhaps from hobbel, a knot, Fland.; hobbelen, to complicate in a knot.] To perplex; to embarrass: as, he is greatly hobbled.

HO'BBLE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Uneven awkward gait.

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. A difficulty. [hobbel, Fland. a knot.] To get into a hobble.

HO'BBLER.* n. s. [old French, hobel; "a cavalier qui monte un cheval Escossois, qu'on nommoit anciennement hobin." Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

1. A kind of horse-soldier.

For twenty hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid six-pence a-piece per diem.

Davies.

2. Men employed in towing vessels by a rope on the land. West of England. Jennings.

HO'BBLINGLY. adv. [from hobble.] Clumsily; awkwardly; with a halting gait.

HO'BBLY.* adj. [from hobble.] Rough uneven: as, a hobbly road. Brockett, N. Country Words.

HO'BBY.* n. s. [hobbje, Fland.; hobereau, French; hebog, Welsh.]

1. A species of hawk.

They have such a hovering possession of the Valtaine, as an hobby haw over a lark. Bacon.

The people will chop like trout at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby.

L'Estrange.

Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryd.

2. An Irish or Scottish horse; a pacing horse; a nag. [Goth. hoppe, a horse; hobin, Fr. a pacing horse. Dr. Johnson. — Hobin, Irish, a horse whose motion is easy. Bullet. This, Dr. Jamieson thinks, may be from obann, R. quick, nimble. Nevertheless he reverts also to the northern language, to which Serenius likewise refers hobby, viz. Icel. hoppa, a mare; as Johnson has to the Goth. hoppe, a horse. This, I may add, carries us to the Greek ἵππος.]

Hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies.

Davies on Ireland.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

As young children, who are ty'd in Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding, When members knit, and legs grow stronger, Make use of such machine no longer; But leap pro libitu, and scout On horse call'd hobby, or without.

Prior.

4. In colloquial language, that which is the favourite object or pursuit of a person. See HOBBY-HORSE.

HO'BBY-HORSE.* n. s.

1. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

Those grave contenders about opinionative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby-horse.

Glanville.

2. A character in the old May-games. The hobby-horse was represented by a man equipped with as much pasteboard as was sufficient to form the head and hinder parts of a horse, the quadrupedal defects being concealed by a long mantle or foot-cloth that nearly touched the ground. The performer on this occasion exerted all his skill in burlesque horsemanship.

Douce.

But see the hobby-horse is forgot:

Fool! it must be your lot,
To supply his want with faces
And some other buffoon graces.

B. Jonson, Masque at Allhorpe.

The word politician is not usual to his maw, and thereupon he plays the most notorious hobby-horse, jesting and frisking in the luxury of his nonsense.

Milton, Colasterion.

3. A stupid or foolish person. [from the preceding sense.]

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

Shakspeare.

4. The favourite object or pursuit of a person.

What the last age denominated follies, or hobby-horses, we style collections: Uncle Toby's library would have required no apology among the hunters of old ballads, and churchwardens' bills of our day!

Ferriar, Illustr. of Sterne, ch. 5.

HOBGOBLIN.† n. s. [according to Skinner, for hobgoblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin: but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblins, empusa, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys' play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg. Dr. Johnson.—Wallis maintains his opinion, in his Correction of Hobbes, with much stoutness: "This derivation you did, at first, cry out upon as very absurd; and you meant to pay me for it; till you were informed, as I hear, by some of your friends, that the scholiast of Aristophanes had the same, (viz. empusa from ἐν and πῦς), and so have Eustathius, Erasmus, Cælius Rhodiginus, Stephanus, Scapula, Calepine, and others; and therefore you were advised not to quarrel with it. Whereupon, waving your main charge, you only tell me, that it doth not become my gravity to tell you, that empusa, your dæmonium Atheniense, was a kind of hobgoblin, that hopped upon one leg; and that thence a boys' play, now in use, comes to be called ludus empusæ; and withal pray me to tell you, where it was that I read the word empusa for the boys' play I spake of? To the question I answer, that I read it so used in Junius's Nomenclator, Rider's, and Thomas's Dictionary; sufficient authors for such a business." Due Correction for Mr. Hobbes, Oxf. 1656. p. 24. Notwithstanding this learned etymology, it is, I think, plain that our ancestors considered the hobgoblin as no other than a Robin Goodfellow; and that, therefore, we may consider hob as the true etymon; hob, the goblin, i. e. Robin Goodfellow. See the example from Shakespeare's Mids. N. Dream. "A bigger kind there is of them [fairies] called with us hobgoblins, and *Robin Goodfellow*s, that would in those superstitious times, grind corn for a mess of milk, &c." Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47. Hence hob was also a general name for a fairy or spirit. "The hobs of night." Morall Plot of C. Wase's Electra of Sophocles, 1649. "Hobthrust, or rather hob o' th' hurst, a spirit supposed to haunt woods only." North. Grose's Prov. Gloss. Hob Howard, the name of a spirit. Brand, Popular Antiq. ii. 359.] A fairy; vulgarly, a frightful one.

You are that shrewd and knavish sprite,

Call'd Robin Goodfellow: —

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,

You do their work. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,

Attend your office and your quality:

Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes. Shakespeare.

HOBBIT. n. s. A small mortar to shoot little bombs.

HO'BLIKE.* adj. [from hob.] Clownish; boorish.

Colgrave, in V. Rude, and Sherwood.

HO'BNAIL.† n. s. [from hobby and nail.]

1. A nail used in shoeing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, I beseech Jove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hobnails.

Shakespeare.

We shall buy maidens as they buy hobnails, by the hundred.

Shakespeare.

2. A clownish person, in contempt.

No antic hobnail at a morris, but is more handsomely facetious. Milton, Colasterton.

HO'BNAILD. adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone, Would'st thou, to run the gantlet, these expose To a whole company of hobnail'd shoes?

Dryden, Juv.

HO'BNOB.† This is probably corrupted from habnab by a coarse pronunciation. See HABNAB. Dr. Johnson.—Grose, in like manner, explains hobnob "at a venture, rashly," as a northern expression, and sometimes pronounced habnab. From him we learn also, that hob or hub is our northern name for the back of the chimney; and that the drinking phrase to hob or nob with a person, arose from beer being placed on the hob to warm, and cold beer being set on a small table called the nob; so that the original question, will you have hob or nob, meant, will you have warm or cold beer? This very improbable account has been somewhat refined in a work of great erudition. "It was customary for persons to pledge each other by taking their cups from the hobs or hubs and nobs, on which they were placed on each side of the fire-place." Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 122. Mr. Brand's etymology and explanation are much more satisfactory; habban, Sax. to have, and næbban, to want. May it not therefore be explained in this sense, "Do you choose a glass of wine, or would you rather let it alone?"

His incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death, and sepulchre; hob, nob, is his word; give't or take't. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

HO'BOY.* n. s. A wind instrument. See HAUTBOY. It is written hoboy, as if it were from the Italian oboe, which, as Pegge has observed, is exactly the pronunciation an Italian would give the French word hautbois; and has no meaning, as the French name has.

HO'BSON'S CHOICE.* An expression often used denoting that kind of choice in which there is no alternative. The caprice of Hobson, the Cambridge carrier, who died in 1630, is said to have given rise to it.

Hobson kept a stable of forty good cattle, always ready and fit for travelling; but when a man came for a horse, he was led into the stable, where there was great choice, but he obliged him to take the horse next to the stable door; so that every customer was alike well-served according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice: From whence it became a proverb, when what ought to be your election was forced upon you, to say, Hobson's choice. Spectator, No. 509.

HO'BTHRUST, or HO'BTHURST.* n. s. An hobgoblin, sometimes called Robin Goodfellow; supposed, according to Grose, to haunt woods only; hob o' the hurst. See HOBGOBLIN. A northern word. Formerly used for a clown also, a rustick.

Both can easily pardon the mistake of this rude writer, nor are at all surprised at it as a novelty, that any ignorant rural hobthrust should call the spirit of nature (a thing so much beyond his capacity to judge of) a prodigious hobgoblin.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 91.

HOCK. n. s. [hox, hob, Saxon.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock. See HOUGH.

TO HOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To disablen in the hock.

HOCK. } n. s. [from Hockheim on HO'CKAMORE.] the Maine.] Old strong Rhenish wine.

Restor'd the fainting high and mighty,

With brandy, wine, and ayna vile;

And made 'em stoutly overcome

With bacchus, hockamore and mum. Hudibras.

Wine becomes sharp, as hock, like vitriolic acidity. Floyer.

If cyder royal should become unpleasant, and as unfit to bottle as old hockamore, mix one hogsh-head of that and one of tar new cyder together.

Mortimer.

HO'CKEY, or HA'WKEY.* n. s. [hock, German, heach, Sax. high, i. e. festival.] A name for harvest-home, used in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire, according to Pegge; and certainly in other places. Hockey cake is that which is distributed to the people at harvest-home. The hockey cart is that which brings the last corn and the children rejoicing with boughs in their hands, with which the horses are also attired. Salmon's Survey, Hertfordshire, cited in Brand's Popular Antiquities.

Hockey is brought

Home with hallowin. Poor Robin's Alm. 1676.

In the town of Cambridge, and centre of our University, such curious remains of ancient customs may be noticed, in different seasons of the year, which pass without observation. The custom of blowing horns on the first of May (old stile) is derived from a festival in honour of Diana. At the hawkie, as it is called, I have seen a clown dressed in woman's clothes, having his face painted, his head decorated with ears of corn, and bearing about him other symbols of Ceres, carried in a waggon, with great pomp and loud shouts through the streets, the horses being covered with white sheets; and when I enquired the meaning of the ceremony, was answered by the people that they were drawing the harvest-queen.

Dr. Clarke's Travels.

HO'CKHERB. n. s. [hock and herb.] A plant; the same with mallows. Ainsworth.

TO HO'CKLE.† v. a. [from hock.]

1. To hamstring; to cut the sinews about the ham or hough. Hanmer.

2. To mow. Applied only to stubble. Mason.

HOCUS POCUS.† [The original of this word is referred by Tillotson to a form of the Romish church. Junius derives it from hocced, Welsh, a cheat, and poke or pocus, a bag, jugglers using a bag for conveyance. It is corrupted from some words that had once a meaning, and which perhaps cannot be discovered. Dr. Johnson. — Archbishop Tillotson's remark is, that "in all probability those common juggling words of hocus pocus are nothing else but a corruption of hoc est corpus, by way of ridiculous imitation of the priests of the church of Rome in their trick of transubstantiation." Serm. xxvi. Pegge notices the corruption as arising from the illiteracy of some Romish priests, who themselves pronounced, in a gabbling manner, the proper words as if they were hocus pocus. Anecd. of the Eng. Language. — I subscribe neither to this, nor to the archbishop's observation; and have often wondered that such a man as Tillotson should have given publicity to his opinion. Mr. Turner, in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, considers it as descended from Ochus Bochus, a magician and demon of the northern mythology; and refers us to the authority of Verelius. From Verelius we derive further information, that this personage's name was in use among the Italian conjurers, "histrionibus Italis hodieque notum; Ochus Bochus, carmina præsto!" Verelii Epitome Hist. Suio-Goth. 4to. 1730. p. 13. This was unknown to Dr. Johnson; and, had it been known to Tillotson, would have saved his remark, which has been repeated in abundance of books.]

1. A juggler.

I will speak of one man more exelling in that craft than others, that went about in king James his time, and long since, who called himself "the king's majesty's most excellent hocus pocus;" and so was he called, because that, at the playing of every trick, he used to say, "hocus pocus, totus, talentus, vade celeriter jubeo," a dark compo-
Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 29.
Boy. Do they think this pen can juggle? I would we had Hokus pokos for 'em then, your people; or 'Travitano Tudesko.
Dam. Who's that, boy?
Boy. Another juggler with a long name.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.
Dancing-wenchies, hocus pocus's, and other antics past my remembrance.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 154.

2. A juggle; a cheat; the words formerly used by conjurers in practising their tricks.
Right and wrong
Could never hold it out so long,
And, like blind fortune, with a sleight
Convey men's interest and right
From Stiles's pocket into Nokes's.
As easily as hocus pocus.
Tutilliana, iii. iii.
If thou hast any hocus pocus tricks to play, which can'st not do them here?
Addison, Drummer.

To Hocus, or To Hocus-Pocus.* To cheat. A low expression.

This gift of hocus-pocussing, and of disguising matters, is surprising.
L'Esrange.
One of the greatest pieces of legerdmain, with which these jugglers hocus the vulgar and incautious of the present age.
Nelson.

HOD.† n. s. [corrupted perhaps in contempt from hood, a hod being carried on the head. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps a corruption of hoved or heaved, that which is carried: the trough is carried on the shoulders, not on the head. Or from the French hotte, a basket to carry on the back. V. Cotgrave in HOTTE.] A kind of trough in which a labourer carries mortar to the masons.
A fork and a hook to be tampering in clay,
A lath, hammer, trowel, a hod or a tray.
Tusser.

HO'DDY.* adj. Well; pleasant; in good spirits. A southern expression. Grose.
HO'DDY-DO'DDY.* n. s. A word of contempt, denoting an awkward, foolish, or ridiculous person.
Cob's wife, and you,
That make your husband such a hoddly-doddy.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.
He has more goodness in his little finger, than you have in your whole body:
My master is a personable man, and not a spindle-shank'd hoddly-doddy.
Swift, Cookmaid's Lett. to Dr. Sheridan.

HO'DMAN. n. s. [hod and man.] A labourer that carries mortar.
HO'DMANDOD.† n. s.
1. A fish.
Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, and the hodmandod or odman.
Bacon.

2. A shell-snail. See DODMAN.
HODGE-PODGE.† n. s. [*hoc*epot, quasi hachis en pot, French. Our word is also written hodgepot, hotchpot, and hotchpotch. Teut. *huts*pot. See HOTCHPOT.]

1. A medly of ingredients boiled together. They have made our English tongue a gallimaufrey, or hodgepodge of all other speeches.
Eyn. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.
As for mercury water, and other poisons, they might be fit for tarts, which is a kind of hodgepot.
Bacon, Speech against the Countess of Somerset.
It produces excellent corn, whereof the Turks make their trachana and bouhourt, a certain hodgepodge of sundry ingredients.
Sandys, Trav.

2. A commixture of lands. See HOTCHPOTCH.

HODIE'RNAL. adj. [hodiernus, Latin.] Of to-day.

HOE.† n. s. [houe, French; houwe, Dutch; hoha, Gothick; old Fr. hoe, mod. houe; Dutch, houwe; which some derive from the Lat. upupa, a similar instrument.] An instrument to cut up the earth, of which the blade is at right angles with the handle.
They should be thinned with a hoe.
Mortimer.

To HOE. v. a. [houer, French; houwen, Dutch.] To cut or dig with a hoe.

HO'GSFENNEL.

HO'GSMUSHROOMS.

n. s. Plants.

Ainsworth.

HO'GSHEAD.† n. s. [supposed to be so called, says Minshew, from the form or shape; but more probably from the Dutch ockshood, and ogshood, from ocks, the name of a certain measure in Brabant, and houden, to contain. See Minshew in V. HOGSHEAD.]

1. A measure of liquids containing sixty-three gallons.

Varro tells, that every jugerum of vines yielded six hundred urns of wine: according to this proportion, our acre should yield fifty-five hogsheads, and a little more. Arbutnot.

2. Any large barrel.

Blow strongly with a pair of bellows into a hogshead, putting into it before that which you would have preserved; and in the instant that you withdraw the bellows, stop the hole. Bacon.

They slung up one of their largest hogsheads: I drank it off; for it did not hold half a pint. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

HO'GSHEARING.* n. s. [hog and shear.] A ludicrous term, denoting much ado about nothing.

Why do I hold you thus long in these his noisome exhalations, and hideous cry of hogshearing, where, as we use to say in England, we have a great deal of noise, and no wool.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662), p. 95.

HO'GSTEE.* n. s. [hog and steer, Saxon, reep, a young bullock.] A wild boar of three years old. Cockeram.

HO'GWASH. n. s. [hog and wash.] The draft which is given to swine.

Your butler purloins your liquor, and the brewer sells you hogwash. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

HOIDEN.† n. s. [hoeden, Welsh; foemina levioris famæ, Latin. Dr. Johnson.

Skinner derives it from the Teut. heyde, a country place, q. d. a rustick; and, with probability, as hoiden is not confined to the female sex. Cotgrave and Sherwood give us the male hoiden.

"Badauld, a fool, dolt, fop, ass, coxcomb, gaping hoydon." Again, Sherwood translates his "rude hoidon" into the French faulourdin, which Cotgrave converts into "a lubberly slob, a heavy sot, a lumpish hoydon." This sense was not known to Dr. Johnson, though Milton also uses it; and indeed of the female hoiden he has given no example. The word, in my opinion, was first applied to men. It occurs repeatedly in Cotgrave with such application, but not to women.]

1. An awkward, rude, ill-behaved man.

Shall I argue of conversation with this hoyden, to go and practise at his opportunities in the larder? Milton, Colasterion.

2. An ill-taught, awkward, country girl.

All those [women] we saw, were the ugliest awkward hoydens in nature.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 44.

Auria had hoised sail, and was on his way toward the bay of Naupactus. Knolles, Hist.

They loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore. Acts, xxvii. 40.

That man which prizeth virtue for itself, and cannot endure to hoise and strike his sails, as the divers natures of calms and storms require, must cut his sails of mean length and breadth, and content himself with a slow and sure navigation. Raleigh.

What made Absalom kick at all the kindnesses of his father, but because his ambition would needs be fingering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne? South.

We thought for Greece The sails were hoisted, and our fears release. Dryden, Æn.

They hoist him on the bier, and deal the dole, And there's an end. Dryden, Pers.

What haste she made to hoist her purple sails! And to appear magnificent in flight, Drew half our strength away. Dryden, All for Love.

Their navy swarms upon the coasts: they cry To hoist their anchors, but the gods deny. Dryden, Æn.

Seize him, take, hoist him up, break off his hold, And toss him headlong from the temple's wall. Southern.

If 'twas an island where they found the shells, their straightways concluded that the whole island lay originally at the bottom of the sea, and that it was hoisted up by some vapour from beneath. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

HOIST.* n. s. [from To hoise.] A lift; the act of raising up. It is used in low conversation.

He is upon his second hoist into the cart. Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 286.

To HOIT.* v. n. [Icel. haita, to dance, to run about.] To leap; to caper.

He lives at home, and sings, and hoits, and revels, among his drunken companions. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Peste.

He that—could do The vaulter's somersals; or us'd to woo With hoiting gambols. Donne, Poems, p. 310.

HO'ITY-TO'ITY.* adj. [from To hoit. "Dancing, jumbling, all a hoit." Florio, in V. INTRESCA. World of Words, 1598. And from the Goth. and Icel. teitr, very merry.] Thoughtless; giddy. It is a low expression; and has been used also as an interjection of surprise, or admiration, or any sudden feeling.

Hoity-toity! what have I to do with dreams! Congreve, Love for Love.

Then hoity-toity, Wisking, frisking. Bickerstaff, Love in a Village.

HOLD, in the old glossaries, is mentioned in the same sense with wold, i. e. a governor or chief officer; but in some other places for love, as holdic, lovely. Gibson's Camden.

To HOLD. v. a. preter. held; part. pass. held or holden. [haldan, Gothick; healdan, Saxon; houden, Dutch.]

1. To grasp in the hand; to gripe; to clutch.

12. To keep from loss. Man should better hold his place By wisdom. Milton, P. L.

13. To have any station.

The star, that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heaven doth hold. Milton, Comus.
And now the strand, and now the plain they held;
Their ardent eyes with bloody streaks were fill'd.
Dryden.

Observe the youth who first appears in sight,
And holds the nearest station to the light. Dryden.

14. To possess; to have.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspeare.
The castle holden by a garrison of Germans, he commanded to be besieged. Knolles, Hist.
Assuredly it is more shame for a man to lose that which he holdeth, than to fail in getting that which he never had. Hayward.

15. To possess in subordination.

He was willing to yield himself unto Solymán as his vassal, and of him to hold his seigniorly for a yearly tribute. Knolles.

course towards the West, did at length peaceably pass through the straits. Abbot.

31. To HOLD forth. To offer; to exhibit; to propose.

Christianity came into the world with the greatest simplicity of thought and language, as well as life and manners, holding forth nothing but piety, charity, and humility, with the belief of the Messiah and of his kingdom. Temple.
Observe the connection of ideas in the propositions, which books hold forth and pretend to teach as truths. Locke.

My account is so far from interfering with Moses, that it holds forth a natural interpretation of his sense. Woodward.

32. To HOLD forth. To pretend; to put forward to view.

How joyful and pleasant a thing is it to have a light held us forth from heaven to direct our steps!
Cheyne.

33. To HOLD in. To restrain; to govern by the bride.

I have lately sold my nag, and honestly told his greatest fault, which is, that he became such a lover of liberty that I could scarce hold him in.
Swift.

34. To HOLD in. To restrain in general.

You shall arraign your conscience,
And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

HO'LLOWNESS.† n. s. [from hollow.]

1. Cavity; state of being hollow.

If you throw a stone or a dart, they give no sound; no more do bullets, except they happen to be a little hollowed in the casting, which hollowness penneth the air. Bacon.

I have seen earth taken up by a strong wind,
so that there remained great empty hollowness
in the place. Hakevill.

The river — is drawn into little hollownesses.

Earth's hollownesses, which the world's lungs are,

Have no more wind than the upper vault of air.

Donne, Poems, p. 144.

An heap of sand or fine powder will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.

Thy youngest daughter does not love the least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

People, young and raw, and soft nurtured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's;

but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness and ingratitude of almost all,
they will then find that a friend is the gift of God,
and that he only who made hearts can unite them.
South.

HO'LLOWROOT. n. s. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HO'LLY. n. s. [holeyn, Sax.] A tree.

The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some varie-gated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Miller.

Fairest blossoms drop with every blast;
But the brown beauty will like holties last. Gay.
Some to the holly hedge

Nestling repair, and to the thicket some;
Some to the rude protection of the thorn.
Thomson.

HO'LLYHOCK. n. s. [holihoc, Saxon, commonly called holyoak.] Rosemallow. It is in every respect larger than the common mallow. Miller.

Holyocks far exceed poppies for their durability, and are very ornamental. Mortimer.

HO'LLYROSE.† } n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.

HO'LLYTREE. }
Why, holly-rose, dost thou of slender frame,
And without scent, assume a rose's name?
Tate's Cowley.

HOLM.† n. s.

1. A river-island; an islet. [Goth. holmr, holm; Sax. holm; Dan. holm.] In the north of England, holms are low lands near a river. It is sometimes pronounced, and written, hovm. Where holm is the name of a place, or where it is joined with another word, it usually signifies a place surrounded with waters; but if water be not near the place, it may signify hilly; the Saxon word, according to Camden, meaning also a hill or mountain.

A little higher up the river was a holm, which divided it into two branches.

Vaillant, Trav. iii. 295.

2. The ilex; the evergreen oak. [Sax.
hollen, holly; the leaves of one sort of the evergreen oak are called holly-leaved.]

Under what tree did'st thou take them companying together? who answered, under a holm tree. Hist. of Sus. ver. 58.

The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sound. Spenser, F. Q.

HO'LMEN.* adj. [from holm.] Made of holm. West of England. Jennings.

HO'LOCAUST. n. s. [ῥολος and καύω.] A burnt sacrifice; a sacrifice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and nothing retained by the offerer.

Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which being an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burthen for a boy. Brown.

Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice; let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an oblation; let the hand do no
unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust.

Ray on the Creation.

Eumenes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice. Broomer.

HO'LOGRAPH. n. s. [ελος and γραφω.] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether, by the granter's own hand.

HOLP. The old preterite and participle passive of help.

His great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him To's home before us. Shakespeare.

HO'LPEH.† The old preterite and participle passive of help.

He hath holpen his servant Israel.

St. Luke, i. 54.

In a long trunk the sound is holpen, though both the mouth and the ear be a handful from the trunk; and somewhat more holpen when the hearer is near, than when the speaker. Bacon.

HO'LSTER. n. s. [heolstrep, Sax. a hiding place.] A case for a horseman's pistol.

In's rusty holsters put what meat Into his hose he cou'd not get. Butler.

To HO'LSTER. v. n. To bustle; to make a disturbance. West of England. Grose.

HOLT.† n. s. [at the beginning or ending of the name of any place, holt signifies that it is or hath been woody, from the Saxon holt, a wood; or sometimes possibly from the Saxon hol, i. e. hollow, especially when the name ends in tun or dun. Gibson.—Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Sax. helan, to cover; holed, hol'd, holt; a rising ground or knoll covered with trees. Div. of Purl. ii. 383. Serenius, long before, had made a similar deduction from the Goth. and Icel. hulfa, hoelia, to cover. We also use this word, however, simply for a hill, without any reference to its covering, but rather with the meaning of bleak or barren. In this case, perhaps, the Icel. holli, a rough and barren place, is the etymon.]

1. A wood; a grove; a forest. The word is still thus used in many parts of England. Cherry-holt, a plantation of cherry-trees. Norfolk.

These holles, and these hayes,
That han in winter dead yben and drie,
Revestin hem in grene, when that May is.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. iii. 352.

The wilde forest, the clothed holles with green.

Ld. Surry, Songs, &c. p. 10.

A grove, holt, or wood of such trees. Mede's Works, (1677), p. 65.

2. A hill.

O'er holt and heath

We went, through deserts waste, and forests wild. Fairfax, Tass. viii. 12.

Underneath the holles so hoar.

Old Poem cited by Percy, Rel. Anc. Poet. v. 1. Gloss.

He, whose rustick muse

O'er heath and craggy holt her wing display'd. Dyer.

HOLY.† adj. [haliz, Saxon; heyligh, Dutch, from hal, healthy, or in a state of salvation.]

1. Good; pious; religious.

See where his grace stands 'tween two clergy-men!

And see a book of prayer in his hand,
True ornaments to know a holy man.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable.

And, doubling that, most holy. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. Hallowed; consecrated to divine use. [Sax. halga; Icel. heilagn, from hala, to praise. Serenius.]

State, holy or unhallow'd, what of that? Shaks.

Bare was his hoary head; one holy hand

Held forth his laurel crown, and one his sceptre.

Dryden.

3. Pure; immaculate.

Common sense could tell them, that the good God could not be pleased with any thing cruel; nor the most holy God with any thing filthy and unclean. South.

4. Sacred.

An evil soul producing holy witness,

Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He has deserv'd it, were it circumbled

Like holy Phœbus' car. Shaksop. Ant. and Cleop.

HOLY-CROSS Day.* n. s. The fourteenth of September. See HOLY-ROOD.

HO'LY-GHOST. n. s. [haliz and garf, Sax.] The third person of the adorable Trinity.

If strength of persuasion be the light which must guide us, I ask, how shall any one distinguish the inspirations of the Holy-Ghost? Locke.

HOLY-ONE.* n. s. [holy and one.]

1. One of the appellations of the Supreme Being, by way of emphasis; applied also to God the Son.

I am the Lord, your Holy-One, the Creator of Israel, your King. Isaiah, xliii. 15.

I know thee who thou art, the Holy-One of God. St. Luke, iv. 34.

Nor from the Holy-One of Heaven

Refrained his tongue blasphemous. Milton, P. L.

2. One separated to the service of God.

And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy-one. Deut. xxxiii. 8.

Though by holy-one be principally meant the high priest, — yet it comprehends all the rest of the priests and Levites in conjunction with him. Patrick.

HOLY-ROOD Day.* n. s. The old festival, called also Holy-Cross day; instituted on account of the recovery of a large piece of the Cross, by the emperor Heraclius, after it had been taken away, on the plundering of Jerusalem by Cosroes, king of Persia, about the year of Christ 615; the fourteenth day, of September. Brand.

This day, they say, is called holy-rood day, And all the youth are now a nutting gone.

Com. of Grim the Collier of Croydon.

HO'LY-THURSDAY. n. s. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, ten days before Whitsuntide.

HO'LY-WEEK. n. s. The week before Easter, in which the passion of our Redeemer is commemorated.

HO'LYDAY.† n. s. [holy and day.]

1. The day of some ecclesiastical festival.

The histories, which were written before the reformation, do frequently speak of transactions happening upon such a holy-day, or about such a time, without mentioning the month; relating one thing to be done at Lammas-tide, and another about Martlemas, &c. so that were these names quite left out of the calendar, we might be at a loss to know when several of these transactions happened. Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer.

2. Anniversary feast.

This victory was so welcome unto the Persians, that in memorial thereof they kept that day as one of their solemn holidays for many years after.

Knolles, Hist.

Rome's holidays you tell, as if a guest
With the old Romans you were wont to feast.

Wallar.

3. A day of gayety and joy.

My approach has made a little holy-day,
And every face was dress'd in smiles to meet me.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

4. A day of rest from ordinary occupation.

Suppose you had a mind to persuade Mr. Maltre to give you a holy-day? would you bluntly say to him, give me a holy-day?

Ld. Chesterfield.

HO'LYDAY.* adj.

1. Befitting a holiday; gay; cheerful.

Headbands, holyday clothes, and veils, glasses, and scarfs. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580), fol. 7.

What, have I scaped love-letters in the holyday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare, Merr. Wives of Windsor.

Courage is but a holyday kind of virtue, to be seldom exercised. Dryden.

HOMAGE. n. s. [hommage, Fr.; homagium, low Latin.]

1. Service paid and fealty professed to a sovereign or superior lord.

Call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects.

Shakespeare.

The chiefs, in a solemn manner, did their homages and made their oaths of fidelity to their earl marshal. Davies.

2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.

The gods' great mother, when her heavenly race Do homage to her. Denham.

A tuft of daisies on a flowery lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made,

And due obedience to the daisy paid. Dryden.

Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters' feet.

Dryden.

To HO'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.

HO'MAGEABLE.* adj. [from homage.] Subject to homage.

Of them two, he of Holland, being homageable to none, — was the more potent.

Howell, Lett. i. ii. 15.

For which he is homageable to the crown of France. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 12.

HO'MAGER. n. s. [hommager, French, from homage.] One who holds by homage to a superiour lord.

Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine Is Cæsar's homager. Shakespeare.

His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Bretagne, his homager. Bacon, Hen. VII.

HOME.† n. s. [ham, Sax. The past participle of hæman, coire. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 347. A word, however, as Serenius has observed, of the highest antiquity; haim, M. Goth. a village, a town; heim, Su. Goth. a house, a mansion; and probably primitive. Wachter views it as derived from hæima, to cover, to shield.]

1. His own house; the private dwelling.

I'm now from home, and out of that provision Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Shakespeare.

Something like home that is not home is to be desired ; it is found in the house of a friend.

Temple.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life, Secur'd from all approaches but a wife. Dryden.

When Hector went to see His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache, He found her not at home ; for she was gone. Dryden.

Those who have homes, when home they do repair, To a last lodging call their wand'ring friends. Dryden.

At home the hateful names of parties cease, And factious souls are weary'd into peace. Dryden.

They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury.

3. The place of constant residence.

Flandria, by plenty made the home of war, Shall weep her crime, and bow to Charles restor'd. Prior.

4. Home, united to a substantive, signifies domesticity, or of the same country.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign. Bacon.

HOME.† adv. [from the noun.]

1. To one's own habitation.

One of Adam's children in the mountains lights on a glittering substance ; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.

2. To one's own country.

Men in distant regions roam, To bring politer manners home. Gay, Fab. 14.

3. Close to one's own breast or affairs.

He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself.

L'Estrange.

This is a consideration that comes home to our interest. Addison.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, you will, by particular application, bring home to your own concern. Wake, Prep. for Death.

4. To the point designed ; to the utmost ; closely ; fully.

Crafty enough either to hide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home. Sidney.

A loyal sir

To him thou follow'st : I will pay thy graces Home both in word and deed. Shaks. Tempest.

Accuse him home and home. Shakspeare.
Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period ; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderson.

Break through the thick array Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addison.

He makes choice of some piece of morality ; and, in order to press this home, he makes less use of reasoning. Broomer.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.

Poison may be false ; The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.

I am sorry to give him such home thrusts ; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

HO'MEBORN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native ; natural.

Though to be thus elemented, arm These creatures from homeborn intrinsic harm. Donne.

2. Domestick ; not foreign.

Num'rous bands With homeborn lyes, or tales from foreign lands. Pope.

HO'MEBRED. adj. [home and bred.]

1. Native ; natural.

God hath taken care to anticipate every man, to draw him early into his church, before other competitors, homebred lusts, or vicious customs of the world, should be able to pretend to him. Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Not polished by travel ; plain ; rude ; artless ; uncultivated.

Only to me two homebred youths belong. Dryden.

3. Domestick ; not foreign.

This once happy land, By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Philips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward ; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense, And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself ; But such a sacred and homefelt delight, Such sober certainty of waking bliss, I never heard till now. Milton, Comus.

Happy next him, who to these shades retires, Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires, Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please, Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.

HO'MEKEEPING.* adj. [home and keep.]

Staying at home.

Homekeeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

HO'MELESS.* adj. [home and less.] Wanting a home ; having no home.

HO'MELILY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely ; inelegantly.

HO'MELINESS.† n. s. [from homely.]

Plainness ; rudeness ; coarseness. Originally, management ; care of home. So "Grisild's wifely homeliness." Chaucer, Cl. Tale. W.

Coarse tapestry may, afar off, show well ; which, when it comes to be close viewed, discovers an homeliness in texture and faults enough, both in shapes and colours. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 51.

Homer has opened a great field of railleury to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison.

HO'MELY.† adj. [from home. And at first this adjective signified what related to home or household.

"The enemies of a man ben they that ben homely with hym." Wicliffe, St. Matt. x. 36. "They of his own household." Pres. Version.] Plain ; homespun ; not elegant ; not beautiful ; not fine ; coarse ; rude. It is used both of persons and things.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise A spring of water mildly tumbling down ; Whereto approached not in any wise

The homely shepherd nor the ruder clown. Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house, So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakspeare.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift : Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Shakspeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakspeare.

Our stomachs will make what's homely savoury. Shakspeare.

It is for homely features to keep home ; They had their name thence. Milton, Comus.

Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band Invade their trenchers next. Dryden.

Now Strephon daily entertains His Chloe in the homeliest strains. Swift.

Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clarendon.

HO'MELY.† adv. Plainly ; coarsely ; rudely.

It is a bashful child ; homely brought up, In a rude hostelry. B. Jonson, New Inn.

Thus like the god his father, homely drest, He strides into hall a horrid guest. Dryden.

HO'MELYN. n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HO'MEMADE. adj. [home and made.] Made at home ; not manufactured in foreign parts.

A tax laid on your native product, and home-made commodities, makes them yield less to the first seller. Locke.

HO'MER. n. s. A Hebrew measure of about three pints.

An homer of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. Lev. xxvii. 16.

HO'MESPEAKING.* n. s. [home and speak.]

Forcible and efficacious speech.

Our Saviour, who had all gifts in him, was Lord to express his indoctrinating power in what sort him best seemed ; sometimes by a mild and familiar discourse ; sometimes with plain and impartial homespeaking. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

HO'MESPUN. adj. [home and spun.]

1. Spun or wrought at home ; not made by regular manufacturers.

Instead of homespun coifs, were seen Good pinnars, edg'd with colberteen. Swift.

2. Not made in foreign countries.

He appeared in a suit of English broad cloth, very plain, but rich : every thing he wore was substantial, honest, homespun ware. Addison.

3. Plain ; coarse ; rude ; homely ; inelegant.

They sometimes put on, when they go ashore, long, sleeveless coats of homespun cotton. Sandys, Trav.

We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone. Dryden.

Our homespun authors must forsake the field, And Shakspeare to the soft Scarlat yield. Addison.

HO'MESPUN. n. s. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustick man. Not in use.

What hempen homespuns have we swaggering here,

So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakspeare.

HO'MESTALL.† n. s. [ham and tcebe, HO'MESTEAD. } Saxon.] The place of the house ; including sometimes a small portion of land adjoining the house.

I do not see thee led into the market-place, or any other part of the city, or thy homestead of Nazareth, but into the vast wilderness.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. Christ tempted.

Both house and homestead into seas are borne, And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.

Through every homestead and through every yard (His midnight walks) panting, forlorn he flies. Somerville.

HO'MEWARD. } adv. [ham and peap, Ho'MEWARDS. } Saxon.] Towards home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.
My affairs

Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare.
Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go.

Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;
And O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!
Milton, Lycidas.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures borne,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence.

HO'MICIDE. n. s. [homicide, French, homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood:
construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding
blood.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicida, Latin.] A murderer; a manslayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
— If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field.

HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage the king oppress. Pope.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [ὁμιλητικός.] Social;
convertible.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirement, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster.

HO'MILIST.* n. s. [from homily.] One who preaches to a congregation.

To this good homilist I have ever been stubborn.
Deaun. and Fl. Scornful Lady.
The plainest Christian homilist, speaking as the oracles of God, Hurd's Works, vol. 8. p. 124.

HO'MILY. n. s. [homilie, Fr. homilie.] A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, Have patience, good people! Shakespeare, As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church,
we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day.

HOMOG'NEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. HOMOG'NEOUS. } δμογενής.] Having the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts. Bacon.
Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous con-cretion, whose material is properly water.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others,
I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

HOMOG'NEALNESS. } n. s. [from homo- HOMOG'NEITY. } neous or homo-HOMOG'NEOUSNESS. } neal.] Participation of the same principles or nature;
similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity or homogeneity of parts.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the scerned liquors.

HO'MOGENY. n. s. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature.
Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeneity.

HOMOLOGOUS.† adj. [homologue, French; ὁμολογ.] Having the same manner or proportions.

Comparing the homologous or corresponding members on both sides.

HOMONYMOUS.† adj. [homonymie, French; ὁμωνυμία.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous: having a common name for several things, but having a different definition of each by the explanation of that name for each.

It is a rule in art, that words which are homonymous, of various and ambiguous significations, ought ever in the first place to be distinguished.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation.

HO'MONYMY.† n. s. [homonymie, French; ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

Shun homonymy, and — state the question.
Shelford, Learned Discourses, (1635), p. 121.
The devil eartheth himself in an homonymy, as a fox in the ground; if he be stopped at one hole, he will get out at another.

HOMOTONOUS. adj. [ὁμοτόνος.] Equable; said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension.

HONE.† n. s. [This word M. Casaubon derives from ῥωνή; Junius from hogsaen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from haen, Saxon, a stone; hænan, to stone; Serenius, from the Icel. hein, a whetstone.] A whetstone.

A hone and a parer, to pare away grass. Tusser.
These snakes they made stiff changelings
Of all the folks they hist on;
They turned barbers into hones,
And masons into free-stone.

To HONE.† v. n. [old Fr. hoigner, to whine;
Su, Goth. hwina.] To whine. See To WHINE.

His heart is still with her, to talk of her, admiring, and commending her, lamenting, honing, wishing himself any thing for her sake.

HO'NEST.† adj. [honeste, Fr.; honestus,
Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?
— A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no further to his health.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is att honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shaks.
3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day,
He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay. Tate.

4. Creditable; honourable.

It is not honest, it may not advance. Chauc. C.T.Pr.
No manner of art that was honest.

Let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, [in the margin, profess honest trades.]

5. Well-looking; jolly; open. [Lat. honestus.]

Bacchus ever fair and young; —
Flush'd with a purple grace,
He shews his honest face.

The strong laborious ox, of honest front.
6. HONEST Fellow. An ironical expression, as good-fellow is sometimes used;
denoting a jovial companion.

I was five hours with three merry, and two honest fellows. The former sang catches; and the latter even died with laughing at the noise they made. — Says one of the honest fellows, — let us drink about. We did so from seven of the clock until eleven!

To HO'NEST.* v. a. [Lat. honesto.] To adorn; to grace; to credit.

He also did honest and honour the same with his presence.

You have very much honested my lodging with your presence.

To HO'NESTATE.* v. a. [Lat. honestatus.]
To honour. Not in use.

HONESTA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. honestatio.]
Adornment; grace.

Many courtiers have brought out with them much of this precious metal of human prudence and sagacity, by which virtuous qualities and honestations
they have been more happy than others in their applications to move the minds of men.

W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1648), p. 118.
HO'NESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,
There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot
Live honestly, would rather perish basely.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HO'NESTY.† n. s. [honestetè, Fr. honestas, Lat.]

1. Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

— Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands,

— Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower.

Shakespeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest; and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem.

Temple.

2. Honour; credit.

For the honesty of your shooting.

Ascham, Taxoph. B. 1.

You looked some time to have had honesty, pleasures, and commodities.

Ep. Ridley, Farewell to his Friends.

3. Frankness; liberality.

A noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. — Every man has his fault, and honesty is his.

Shakespeare, Tim. of Ath.

HO'NEY. n. s. [huniç, Saxon honig, Dutch; honec, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis, or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb is destined for the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves.

Hill, Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees.

Ral. Hist.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours.

Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot.

L' Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sope, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire.

Arbutn.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk, we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring.

Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language.

Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Shakespeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness; a name of tenderness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee.

Dryden.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

HO'NEY-BAG. n. s. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter.

Grew, Museum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. s. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd.

Dryden.

HO'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flamed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

Wiseman.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. s. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects.

Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,

And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn.

Garth.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. s. [melanthus, Lat.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name.

Miller.

HO'NEY-GNAT. n. s. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect.

Ainsworth.

HO'NEY-HARVEST.* n. s. [honey and harvest.] Honey collected.

Bees — haunt the fields, and bring
Their honey-harvest home.

Dryden, Ovid.

HO'NEY-MOON.† n. s. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

And now their honey-moon, that late was clear,
Doth pale, obscure, and tenebrous appear.

Cornucopia, (1612).

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over.

Addison.

HO'NEY-MONTH.* n. s. [honey and month.] The honey-moon.

Sometimes the parties fly asunder even in the midst of courtship, and sometimes grow cool in the very honey-moon.

Taiter, No. 192.

HO'NEY-MOUTHED.* adj. [honey and mouth.] Flattering; using honied words.

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best; I'll take't upon me:
If I prove honey-mouthed, let my tongue blister.

Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

HO'NEY-STALK.* n. s. Clover-flower.

Johnson.

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep.

Titus Andronicus.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE.† n. s. [caprifolium, Lat.] 1. Woodbine; the plant.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it.

Shakespeare.

With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.

Milton, Comus.

2. The flower or blossom of the woodbine. Woodbine that beareth the honey-suckle.

Barret, Alv. (1580.)

So doth the woodbine the sweet honey-suckle
Gently entwist.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

A honey-suckle,
The amorous woodbine's offspring,
Sicily and Naples, or The Fatal Union, (1640.)
Then melfoil beat, and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring savours strew the ground.

Dryden.

HO'NEY-SWEET.* adj. Sweet as honey.

The virtuous quiete,

That is in marriage honey-sweet.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Stains.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

HO'NEY-TONGUED.* adj. [honey and tongue.] Using soft speech.

This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whalès bone;
And consciences, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongu'd Boyet.

A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart!

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. s. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.

Shakespeare.

HO'NIED.† adj. [from honey.] This is an adjective of frequent occurrence in our old poets; but it is not confined to them; for the admirable author of the Christian Life has also adopted it.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,

That at her flowery work doth sing.

Milt. R. Pens.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton, S. A.

The Grecian sophists, as Plutarch tells us, by their singing tones, and honied words, and effe-minate phrases and accents, did very often transport their auditors into a kind of bacchical enthusiasm.

Scott, Works, ii. 129.

HO'NIEDNESS.* n. s. [from honied.] Sweetness; allurement.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Lat.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere.

Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HO'NOUR.† n. s. [honneur, French; honor, old French and Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

I will promote thee unto very great honour.
Num. xxi. 17.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not now used, Dr. Johnson says. It was applied, however, in his time, as it is now, to the Master of the Rolls; and now also to the great law-officer, of modern appointment, called the Vice-Chancellor.

Return unto thy lord,

Bid him not fear the separated councils:

His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby.

Shakespeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them
honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.

Shakespeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness;
magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
— That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakespeare.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaks.

His Grace of Canterbury,

Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.
— Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shaks.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour-flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven:
If this prove true, they'll pay for't.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against.

Shakespeare.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all.

Milton, P. L.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning.

Burnet, Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden, Æn.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.
Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that at best can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restored to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakespeare.

Honours were conferred upon Antontine by Hadrian in his infancy. Wotton, Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The sire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed.

Dryden.

14. Signiory; lordship.

Being his majesty's steward of his majesty's honour and manor of Woodstock.

Ld. Clarendon, Life Contin. iii. 949.

15. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise.

Shakespeare.

To HO'NOUR. v. a. [honorar, French;
honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esth. xvi. 11.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus. x. 30.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? Ecclus. x. 31.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avail's thee not.

Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number.

Shakespeare.

3. To glorify.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

Ex. xiv.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

Isa. xliii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakspeare.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shakspeare.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,

And honourable wounds from battle brought.

Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;

And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakspeare.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this,
that he took Joppe for an haven. 1 Mac. xiv. 5.

Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable. Shakspeare.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself
they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow.

Shakspeare.

8. Equitable.

HO'NOURABLENESS.† n. s. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity; dignity; honesty.

My next place, of the honourableness of mariage amongst all, he smooths over with a pretended concession.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 108.

Peter, moved with the patriarch's persuasions, the equity and honourableness of the cause,—took the whole business upon him.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 11.

To spread the fame of the Gospel in the world;
to make it appear lovely in the eyes of all beholders; and to allure them to submit to the honourableness, the gentleness, the easiness of its yoke.

Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 366.

The dignity of the office, and honourableness of the employment.

Eckard, Gr. of Cont. of the Clergy, p. 126.

HO'NOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

Shakspeare.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

HO'NOURER.† n. s. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

First, for what concerns our own church: He was a sincere honourer and approver of it.

Ward, Life of Dr. Henry More, p. 165.

HO'NOURLESS.* adj. [honour and less.] Without honour; not honoured.

That religion, which renders void the first precept of my text, by taking away the "fear of God," will always be for introducing a form of government which renders void the second; by taking away all "honour from the king." And so, reciprocally, will an honourless king promote the worship of a fearless God.

Warburton, Serm. xiv.

HOOD.† n. s. [Sax. hab; German heit; Dutch heid.] Quality; character; condition; as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

Thou kea'st little good,

So vainly to advance thy heedlesse hood.

Spensers, Shep. Cal. Feb.

HOOD.† n. s. [hob, Saxon, probably from hepo, head. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer writes it hawwe, and Mr. Tyrwhitt derives it from the Teut. hooft, the head. Mr. H. Tooke views it as the participle of the Sax. heapan, to heave or lift up. Ruddiman, as the Dutch huyze, huys; a coif, huyzen, to cover the head. And thus also Serenius refers to the Alem. huaten, huoden, to cover, to protect.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils.

Isaiah, iii. 23.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd; Their hoods and sleeves the same.

Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

All hoods make not monks.

Shakespeare, K. Henry VIII.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him.

Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it.

Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree. It is so named from the hood or cowl of the monks; the cut or fashion of which was so contrived, that in cold or wet weather it might be a covering to the head; or, at other times, might be thrown back, hanging upon the neck by the lower end, after the same manner as the academical hood is now worn.

Such ministers, as are graduates, shall wear upon their surplices such hoods as are agreeable to their degrees; which no minister shall wear, being no graduate, under pain of suspension.

Constit. and Canons Ecc. 58.

To Hood.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

Huloet.

To converse veiled and hooded, and sing like a devout nun.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674.) p. 816.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd, The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd.

Pope.

2. To disguise, as in a hood.

But hooded with the shew of outward love, Beguiling my simplicitie of mind, He in the end a deadly foe did prove.

Mir. for Mag. p. 648.

3. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen.

Shakespeare.

4. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes, In firmamental waters dipt above; Of it a broad extinguisher he makes, And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove.

Dryden.

5. To put the covering on the head of a hawk. A term of falconry, applied to a hawk when he is not to fly. See the third sense of Hood.

See him laugh'd at! See him baffled!

As a hooded hawk, or owl

With light blinded, when the fowl

With their armies flock about her,

Some to beat, and some to flout her.

Fanshawe, Pastor Fido.

HO'ODMAN Blind. n. s. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind?

Shakespeare.

To HO'ODWINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hoodwinking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice.

Sidney.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries.

Shakespeare.

Then she who hath been hoodwink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirrour see.

Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmast sports, one lost, And, hoodwink'd, for a man embrace a post.

B. Jonson.

Satan is fain to hoodwink those that start.

Dec. of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hoodwinks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light.

Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hoodwink'd chance! Rowe.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort, The hoodwink'd goddess keeps her partial court.

Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient, for the prize, I'll bring thee to, Shall hoodwink this mischance.

Shakespeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hoodwinked with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him.

Sidney.

HOOF. n. s. [hof, Saxon; hoef, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets.

Ezek. xxvi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs.

More.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent.

Farrier's Dict.

To HOOF.* v. n. [from the noun.] To walk; to move by leisurely steps: applied to cattle.

To hoof it o'er as many weary miles, —

As e'er the bravest antler of the woods.

Ethwald, W. Scott's Lady of the Lake, Notes.

HO'OFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest.

Greuv.

HOOK.† n. s. [hoce, booc, Saxon; hoeck, Dutch; hake, Icel. hokni, crooked, and Teut. haeck, the same.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot-hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down.

Knolles.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,

That from the foolish fish their baits do hide.

Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce

Their slinky jaws.

Shakespeare.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,

They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught.

Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man

Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,

Fairness, which strikes the eye.

Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,

With hooks and ladles, as need did require;

The while the viands in the vessel boil'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick.

Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book, Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook.

Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,

Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks.

Cleveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling, and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again.

L'Estrange.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,

And friend Delany at his books,

Swift.

8. Hook. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running.

Ainsworth.

9. Hook or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the two examples from Hudibras and Dryden. The phrase is very ancient in our language, although ascribed to the names of two learned judges, in the time of Charles the First, Hooke and Crooke; implying, that a difficult cause was to be gotten either by Hooke or Crooke. See observations on Spenser by Warton, who says that the phrase occurs in Skelton; and that the form was not then invented as a proverb, but applied as a pun. The fact is, that hook is the same as crook; our old dictionaries, under hook, say, "a hook or crook;" Huloet, Barret, &c. The original meaning therefore was, either in one form or the other.

For all your bragges, hookes and crookes, you have such a fall, as you shall never be able to stande upright again.

Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 341.

That which her size had scrap't by hookes and crookes. Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 27.

Master of almost two millions yearly, with hook or crook. Milton, Econom. ch. xi.

Which he by hook or crook had gather'd, And for his own inventions father'd. Hudibras. He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To HOOK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish: upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she

I can hook to me. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law now reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

To HOOK.* v. n. To bend; to have a curvature.

Her bill hooks, and bends downwards.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

HO'OKED.† adj. [from hook.]

1. Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypsus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree, To seize the prize which I so dearly bought: Mean match to thine; for still above the rest, Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryden.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backside of leaves. Grew.

2. Furnished with hooks, or any instrument to cut with. [falcatus, Lat.]

The hooked chariot stood, Unstain'd with hostile blood. Milton, Ode Nativ.

HO'OKEDNESS. n. s. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HO'OKER.* n. s. [from hook.]

1. That which catches as with a hook.

2. A vessel built like a pink, but rigged and masted like a hoy; much used by the Dutch. Chambers.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome there, Cassar, I came, saw, and overcame.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

HO'OKY.* adj. [from hook.]

1. Full of hooks. [hamosus, Lat.] Huloet.

2. Pertaining to a hook. [hamatilis.]

Huloet.

HOOP.† n. s. [hoep, Dutch; hop, Sax. hapt, Icel. a band, from hypia, to draw in, to contract. Serenius.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,

A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,

That the united vessel of their blood

Shall never leak.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If I knew

What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world I would pursue it.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

— About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,

What hoops of iron could my spleen contain.

Dryden, Juv.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,

Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop.

Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:

The entry brush'd against her hoop.

Swift.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at distance.

Richardson, Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time,

with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand.

Addison on Italy.

To HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and

I will make it felony to drink small beer.

Shakespeare.

The casks for his majesty's shipping were packed as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron.

Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou

Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,

I will devise a death. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

I hoop the firmament, and make

This my embrace the zodiack.

Cleveland.

That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake.

Grew.

To HOOP.† v. n. [from wopgan or wopgan, Goth. or houper, French, derived from the Gothick. This word is generally written whoop, which is more proper, if we deduce it from the Gothick; and hoop, if we derive it from the French. Chaucer adopts the French form.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

They shrieked and they houped.

Chaucer, Nun's Pr. Tale.

To HOOP. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles,

Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be

Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOP.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shout. See WHOOP.

You have run them all down with hoops and hola's, i. e. with noise and confidence.

Bp. Parker, Repr. Rehears. Transpr. p. 26.

2. A measure, containing a peck, or a quarter of a strike. North. Grose.

3. The bird, called hoopoo. Ray, Dict. Tril.

HO'OPER.† n. s. [from hoop, to enclose with hoops.]

1. A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

Every tinker, tailor, hooper, hostler, cardmaker, and horsekeeper, might as they did compare in learning, and all other offices, above a doctor of divinity.

Martin, Mar. of Priests, (1554,) Ll. ii. b.

2. A wild swan: by the name of hooper this bird is known among sportsmen and ornithologists; but I have not met with the etymology.

HO'OPING-COUGH. n. s. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

HO'OPPOO.* n. s. [Lat. upupa; Gr. επὺφ. Linnaeus says the name is from the note of the bird, which resembles it. Others deduce it from the Fr. huppé, crested.]

A bird, called also the hoop, of the class of picæ; not a lapwing, as some have asserted.

"Vannellus" (the lapwing) is a new-made name of the French "vanneau;" which bird, by a great mistake, hath been generally taken to be the upupa of the ancients, which is now by all acknowledged to be the hoopoo.

Ray, Dict. Tril. p. 22.

HOOSE, or HOOZE.* n. s. [Icel. hoese.] A difficulty of breathing. Craven Dialect. Thus hoased is hoarse, in the west of England. Grose. See also HAUST.

To HOOT.† v. n. [hwit, Welsh; huer, Fr.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollowed and hooted after me as at the arrantest coward.

Sidney.

Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more.

Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back

The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wenders

At our quaint sports.

Shakespeare.

3. To shout in mirth, in good spirits.

With hooting and shouting we pierce through the sky,

And Echo turns huntress, and doubles the cry.

Dryden.

To HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts, Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' th' city.

Shakespeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god

That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird, from muting on my head.

B. Jonson.

Partridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment.

Swift.

HOOT. n. s. [huée, French, from the verb.]

Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glanville, Sceptis.

HO'OTING.* n. s. [from hoot.] A shout:
"Hou hou hou, hootings or whoopings; voices wherewith swine are scared, or infamous old women disgraced!"

Cotgrave.

To HOP.† v. n. [hoppan, Saxon; hoppen, Dutch; hoppa, Su. Goth. probably from the M. Goth. hup, the hip.]

1. To dance. This is the primary sense, like that of the Sax. hoppan. It is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

At every brideale would he singe and hoppe.

Chaucer, Cook's Tale.

What good doth all that dauncing of young women holding upon men's armes, that they may hop the higher?

Northbrooke, Treat. against Dauncing, p. 132.

2. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,

And yet no further than a wanton's bird,
That let it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again.

Shakespeare.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir.

Shakespeare.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes.

Shakespeare.

The painted birds, companions of the spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryd.
Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid.

Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal,
and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold?

Collier on Duelling.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

3. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

I always beat him at three jumps; but he could hop upon one leg further than I.

Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.

4. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there, his jaw a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden, Homer.

5. To move; to play.

Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop.

Spenser, F. Q.

HOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dance. So a hop is still denominated in many parts of England. Ainsworth calls it a place, where meaner people dance. But it is, assuredly, the dance also itself.

2. A jump; a light leap.

3. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

HOP. n. s. [hop, Dutch; hupulus, Lat.]

A plant.
It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotches in lopping to save.

Tusser.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom.

Bacon.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop.

Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles.

Mortimer.

When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty feet long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer.

HOP-BIND.* n. s. [hop and bind.] The stem of the hop. See BIND.

It is made felony without benefit of clergy, maliciously to cut any hop-binds growing in a plantation of hops. Blackstone.

HOP-GARDEN.* n. s. [hop and garden.]
A ground planted with hops; formerly, hop-yard; like vine-yard. See HOP-YARD.

HOP-FAST.* n. s. [hop, and probably oast, Lat. dried.] In Kent, a kiln for drying hops.

HOP-PICKER.* n. s. [hop and pick.] A person who carefully gathers the ripe hops.

To the festivities of harvest-home must be referred the popular custom among the hop-pickers
in Kent. Brand, Pop. Antiq.

HOP-POLE.† n. s. The pole which supports the hop. See Hop.

HOP-YARD.* n. s. [hop and yard.]
Ground in which hops are planted. See Hop.

He's busy at his hop-yards now.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

To HOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To im-pregnate with hops.

Brew in October, and hop it for long keeping.

Mortimer.

To increase the milk, diminished by flesh-meat,
take malt drink not much hopped.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HOPE. n. s. [hopa, Sax.; hope, Dutch.]
1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job, xiv. 7.

When in heaven she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now.

Crashaw.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Ep. Taylor.

He sought them both, but wish'd his hop might find

Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies.

Milton, P. L.

The Trojan dames

To Pallas' fane in long procession go,

In hopes to reconcile their heavenly foe.

Dryden, Virg.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't?

L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Villoison.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him.

2 Mac. vii. 14.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Ecclus. xiv. 2.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakespeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryd.

HOPE.† n. s. [If we can have any confidence in Bullet, hope was used in this sense, in the language of the ancient Gauls,
"petite vallée entre des montagnes."
Dr. Jamieson.] Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.

Ainsworth.

Hope signifies a dingle, or little valley; and is retained in Kent, and other parts of England, in the names of places. Gloss. to Urry's Chaucer.

To HOPE.† v. n. [Sax. hopian.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest.

Ep. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

My muse, by storms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast,
And finds more favour by her ill success
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryd.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psalms xxxi. 24.

To HOPE.† v. a. To expect with desire.

Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Heb. xi. 1.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-binding winter mars our hop'd-for hay. Shaks.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.

Dryden.

HO'PEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee:

I know his noble nature, not to let

Thy hopeful service perish.

Shakespeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert.

Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,

Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see?

Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore.

Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand.

Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments.

Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,

Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,

Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,

If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain.

Pope.

HO'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls' sons and heirs.

Watton.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish.

Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature.

Glanville.

HO'PEFULNESS. n. s. [from hopeful.]
Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability.

Watton on Education.

HO'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead?

Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

Shakespeare.

[He] — watches with greedy hope to find

His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;

Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each

To other speedy aid might lend at need.

Milton, P. L.

The fallen archangel, envious of our state,

And hopeless to prevail by open force,

Seeks hid advantage. Dryden, State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie

In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die.

Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life.

Shaks.

HO'PELESSLY.  adv.* [from hopeless.]
Without hope.

Is your last hope past to mollify Morecraft's heart about your mortgage? — Hopelessly past.

Beum. and Ft. Scornful Lady.

HO'PER. n. s. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents.

Swift.

HO'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin.

Hammond.

HO'PPER. † n. s. [hoppepe, Sax. a dancer.] One who dances, or hops, or jumps on one leg.

I conceive, a female hopper, or dancer, was called a hoppeper.

Tyrrwhitt, Notes on Chaucer.

HO'PPER. n. s. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremu.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill.

Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,

In my whole life I never saw grist ground,

And mark the clack how justly it will sound.

Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth. Sometimes pronounced, and written, hoppet. Grose.

HO'PPERS. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HO'PPET.  See* the second sense of HOPPER.

HO'PPING.  n. s.* [from hop.] A dance; a meeting of persons intending to dance.

Their daunces were spiritual, religious, and godly, not after our hoppings, and leapings, and interminglings, men with women.

Northbrooke, Tr. against Danouncing, p. 118.

In the north of England, — meetings are still kept up under the name of hoppings.

Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 428.

To HO'PPLE.  v. a.* To tie the feet or legs together. A northern word. Grose, and Brockett.

HO'P-SCOTCH.  A game.* See HOPPERS. HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

Howe'er reduced and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces.

Prior.

HO'RALLY.  adv.* [from horal.] Hourly.

Cockeram.

HO'RARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you

What you perhaps forgot befell you,

By way of horary inspection,

Which some account our worst error. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers.

Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HORDE. † n. s. [A Tartarian term, implying multitude.] A clan; a migratory crew of people.

His [a Tartar duke's] hord consisted of about a thousand households of a kindred.

Purchas. Pilgr. (1617.) p. 478.

Such were the hords among the Goths, the clans in Scotland, and septs in Ireland.

Temple, Introduct. Hist. of England.

They once relum'd the flame

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,

Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,

And gave the vanquish'd world another form.

Thomson, Winter.

HORE, or HOORE.  n. s.* [Sax. hore; old Fr. hore; Cornish, hora.] Our old and proper word for whore. See WHORE.

HORIZON. † n. s. [ὁρίζων, Gr. that which terminates, from ὅρος, a boundary.] Shakespeare has once placed the accent on the first syllable of this word: but it should be always on the second. The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car Above the border of this horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.

Shakespeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland.

Bacon.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen, Regent of day; and all the horizon round Invested with bright rays.

Milton, P. L.

The morning lark, the messenger of day, Saluted in her song the morning gray;

And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,

That all the horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight.

Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect.

Addison.

HORIZONTAL. † adj. [horizontal, French, from hortal.] Pronounced new and unusual, in 1656, by Heylin.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations.

Milton, P. L.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus.

Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle?

Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]
In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley, Serms. vii.

HORN.† n. s. [haurn, Gothick; hopn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

Ld. Chesterfield.

HO'RN.Y.† adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.

He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,
And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn.

Milton, P. R.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical figure.
Ray.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet.

Dryden.
The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance.
Addison.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

4. Consisting of horns.

He leads the staring infant through the hall;
Points out the horny spoils that grac'd the wall;
Tells how this stag through three whole counties fled,
What rivers swam, where bay'd, and where he bled.
Gay, Birth of the Squire.

HORO'GRAPHY. n. s. [horographie, Fr.; ὁρα and γράφω, Gr.] An account of the hours.

HO'ROLOGE.† n. s. [horologium, Latin; ὁρολογιον, Gr. from ὁρα, and λέγω.] "The abbey horologe," the clock of the abbey. Chaucer.] Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsamnia. Brown.

HOROLOGIO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [horologigraphie, Fr.; ὁρολογίων, and γράφω, Gr.] An account of instruments that tell the hours; also, the art of constructing dials.

HOROLOGIOGRA'PHICK.* adj. [from horologigraphia.] Pertaining to the art of dialling.

The gnomonick projection is also called the horologigraphick projection, because it is the foundation of dialling. Chambers.

HORO'METRY. n. s. [horometrie, Fr.; ἡρα and μετρέω, Gr.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HO'ROSCOPE. n. s. [horoscope, Fr. ὁρίσκειν, Gr.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and contravert all that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His sire, the blear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, fictions, and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiac by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley.

HO'RRENT.† adj. [horrens, Lat. "Horrentia pilis agmina."] Pointed outwards; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
Of fiery seraphim encircled round
With bright imblazonry and horrent arms. Milton, P. L.

The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
Some helpless bark; while sacred pity melts
The general eye, or terror's icy hand
Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair.
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

HO'RRIBLE. adj. [horrible, Fr.; horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be sights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton, P. L.

O sight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milt. P. L.
Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

HO'RRIBLENESS.† n. s. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terrible-ness; fearfulness.

The horribleness of sin, the terror of God's indignation.

Abp. Cranmer, Def. of the Sacram. (1550.) fol. 7.
The horribleness of a crime committed.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 4. C. 10.

HO'RRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]

1. Dreadfully; hideously.

What hideous noise was that!

Horribly loud. Milton, S. A.

2. To a dreadful degree.

The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HO'RRID.† adj. [horridus, Lat.]

1. Giveous; dreadful; shocking.

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those Which chance to find us. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare.

Horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton, P. L.

2. Shocking; offensive; unpleasing: in women's cant.

Already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

This makes the style look rough and horrid, and breaks the noble periods into little fragments.
Blackwall, Sacr. Class. ii. 132.

4. Gloomy.

In horrid shade or dismal den. Milton, P. L.
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Milton, P. R.

In shelter thick of horrid shade. Pope, Odys.

HO'RRIDLY.* adv. [from horrid.] Terribly; shockingly.

Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horridly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

These inferences, how horridly soever they sound, yet I see not how they can be disclaimed.
Lively Oracles, &c. p. 57.

HO'RRIDNESS.† n. s. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

The looks of beauty she knew how to wear,
And make her horridness appear so sweet,
That she the wisest and most piercing eyes
Had often blinded by her fallacies. Beaumont's Psyche, (1651.) p. 281.

There needs no comment to set forth the horridness of these assertions.
Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horreur.

His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson.

HORRISONOUS. adj. [horrisonus, Lat.] Sounding dreadfully. Dict.

HO'RROUR.† n. s. [horror, Lat.; horreur, Fr. from the Gr. ὁρρέω, to fear, to have fear. The French etymologists refer this word, like coward, to the tail, i. e. the Greek ὄπισθος, and for a similar reason. See COWARD. "Horreur, derivé du Grec ὁρρέω, dont la racine est ὄπισθος, le croupion, parce que certains animaux, quand ils ont peur, serrent leur queue entre les jambes." Morin, Fr. Gr. Dict. Etym.]

1. Terrour mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

The horror of death and everlasting damnation.
Abp. Cranmer, Def. of the Sacr. (1550.) p. 7.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Spenser, F. Q.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold. Milton, P. L.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confest. Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughter'd thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear
wood,
The nodding horror of whose shady brows
Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger.

Milton, Comus.
Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades every flower, and darkens every green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking.

Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

HORSE.† n. s. [Sax. hopp; Suet. hors; horsa, ors; Icel. hross or ross, from ras, a course; reiten, Germ.; rida, Suet. to ride. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught, and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses.

Locke.

2. A constellation.

Thy face, bright Centaur, autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man;
Whilst winter's shivering Goat afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course.

Creech.

3. To take HORSE; to set out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine.

Addison on Italy.

4. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't came by?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing.

Bacon, War with Spain.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse.

The Arcadian horse

With ill success engage the Latin force.

Dryden, Æn.

5. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

7. As fine as a HORSE. A phrase applied to a person tawdrily or gaudily dressed.

It being the custom in this month (May) for the passengers to give the waggoner at every inn a ribbon to adorn his team, she soon discovered the origin of the proverb, as fine as a horse; for, before they got to the end of their journey, the poor beasts were almost blinded by the tawdry, party-coloured flowing honours of their heads.

Gent. Mag. (1754), vol. xxiv. p. 354.

8. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse; as, a horse-face, a face of which the features are large and indelicate. Dr. Johnson.

— The prepositive horse is applied variously to denote several things large and coarse by contra-distinction. Thus, in the vegetable system, we have the horse-radish, horse-walnut, and horsechesnut. In the animal world there is the horse-emmaet, (or formica leo), the horse-muscle, and the horse-crab; not forgetting that a fat, clumsy, vulgar woman is jocularly termed a horse-godmother. Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng.
Language, p. 24.

To HORSE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wish none of my friends ever to thrive.

Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonsalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. To carry on the back.

That treat of the discomfiting of keepers, horsing
the deer on his own back, and making off with equal resolution and success. Butler's Characters.

3. To ride any thing.

Stalls, bulks, windows
Are smother'd, leads are fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him.

Shakespeare.

4. To cover a mare.

If you let him out to horse more mares than your own, you must feed him well.

Mortimer.

To HORSE.* v. n. To get on horseback.

Lapping himself up handsomely in his long cloak, he went to horse; and rode as women use:
then mounted the barber likewise on his mule.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iii. 13.

HORSEBACK. n. s. [horse and back.] Riding posture; the state of being on a horse.

I've seen the French,

And they can well on horseback.

Shakespeare.

I saw them salute on horseback,
Beheld them when they lighted.

Shakespeare.

Alexander fought but one remarkable battle wherein there were any elephants, and that was with Porus king of India; in which notwithstanding he was on horseback.

Bryant.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,
Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar.

Dryden, Juv.

If your ramble was on horseback, I am glad of it, on account of your health.

Swift to Gay.

HORSEBEAN. n. s. [horse and bean.] A small bean usually given to horses.

Only the small horsebean is propagated by the plough.

Mortimer.

HORSEBLOCK. n. s. [horse and block.] A block on which they climb to a horse.

HORSEBOAT. n. s. [horse and boat.] A boat used in ferrying horses.

HORSEBOY. n. s. [horse and boy.] A boy employed in dressing horses; a stable-boy.

Some horseboys, being awake, discovered them by the fire in their matches.

Knolles, Hist.

HORSEBRAMBLES.* n. s. pl. [horse and bramble.] Briars; wild rose. Norfolk. Grose.

HORSEBREAKER. n. s. [horse and break.]

One whose employment it is to tame horses to the saddle.

Under Sagittarius are born chariot-racers, horsebreakers, and tamers of wild beasts. Creech.
HORSCHE'SNUT. n. s. [horse and chesnut.
Esculus.] A tree.

It hath digitated or fingered leaves;
the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike: the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks' time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots.

Miller.

The horsechesnut grows into a goodly standard.

Mortimer.

HORSECOURSER.† n. s. [horse and coursur.]

Junius derives it from horse and cose, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoser. The word now used in Scotland is horsecourper, to denote a jockey, seller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them. Dr. Johnson. — Under the word scourse, however, he notices the Italian scorsa, exchange; whence, he adds, a horse-scourser.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.

A servant to a horsecourser was thrown off his horse.

Wiseman.

A Florentine bought a horse for so many crowns, upon condition to pay half down: the horsecourser comes to him next morning for the remainder.

L'Estrange.

HORSECRAB. n. s. A kind of fish.

Ainsworth.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Ho'RSEKNOPS.* n. s. pl. [horse and knop.] Heads of knapweed. North. Grose.

Ho'RSELAUGH.† n. s. [horse and laugh.] Some etymologists contend, that it is a corruption of hoarse laugh; but in such case it must be confined to those who either naturally have a very rough voice, or have got a violent cold; neither of which circumstances are absolutely necessary; for what we call a horse-laugh depends rather upon loudness, rude vehemence, or vulgarity of manner. It seems to be, in fact, no more than an expression of augmentation, as the prepositive horse is applied variously to denote several things large and coarse by contradistinction. Pegge. See the eighth sense of HORSE. A loud violent rude laugh.

A horselaugh, if you please, at honesty;
 A joke on Jekyl. Pope.

Ho'RSELEECH. n. s. [horse and leech.]

Ho'RSELOAD.* n. s. [horse and load.] As much as a horse can carry.

They have, like good sumpters, laid ye down their horseload of citations and fathers at your door. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Ho'RSELY.* adj. [from horse.] Applied to a horse, Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, as manly is to a man. Not now in use.

This horse —

So high was, and so broad, and long;
 Therewith so horsely, and so quick of eye.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

Ho'RSEMAN. n. s. [horse and man.]

1. One skilled in riding.

A skilful horseman, and a huntsman bred.

Dryden.

2. One that serves in wars on horseback.

Encounters between horsemen on the one side, and foot on the other, are seldom with extremity of danger; because as horsemen can hardly break a battle on foot, so men on foot cannot possibly chase horsemen.

Hayward.

In the early times of the Roman commonwealth, a horseman received yearly tria milita æris, and a foot-soldier one mille; that is, more than sixpence a day to a horseman, and twopence a day to a foot-soldier.

Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A rider; a man on horseback.

With descending show'rs of brimstone fir'd,
 The wild Barbarian in the storm expir'd;
 Wrapt in devouring flames the horseman rag'd,
 And spur'd the steel in equal flames engag'd.

Addison.

A horseman's coat shall hide
 Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

Ho'RSEMANSHIP. n. s. [from horseman.]
 The art of riding; the art of managing a horse.

Ho'RSEPOUND. n. s. [horse and pond.] A pond for horses.

Ho'RSEACE. n. s. [horse and race.] A match of horses in running.

In horseaces men are curious that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other.

Bacon.

Trajan, in the fifth year of his tribuneship, entertained the people with a horseace.

Addison.

HORSERA'DISH. n. s. [horse and radish.] A root acrid and biting: a species of scurvygrass.

Horse-radish is increased by sprouts spreading from the old roots left in the ground, that are cut or broken off.

Mortimer.

Stomachicks are the cresse acrids, as horse-radish and scurvygrass, infused in wine.

Flayer on the Humours.

Ho'RSESHOE. n. s. [horse and shoe.]

1. A plate of iron nailed to the feet of horses.

Dryden, Georg.

HOT† adj. [Sax. hat, hæt, i. e. heated; the past participle of the verb hætan, calefacere, Mr. H. Tooke. See also the participial adjective HEAT.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?

— Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
— No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.
Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakespeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa. Shakespeare.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults, that hath been known. Bacon.

He resolved to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery. Clarendon.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
The assault so hot, as if 'twere only there. Denham.

Our army

Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryd.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go. Shakespeare.
Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense. Denham.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; Æneas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people. Dryden.

5. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets. Locke.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jouture,
Which makes him have so hot a mind t' her. Hudibras.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense raising the desire, or action excited; as, a hot pursuit.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and full career. Dryden.

Hotspur Julius on his mettled horse. Fanshawe, Poems, (ed. 1676,) p. 279.

HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash; heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgement. Poacham.

HOT'TENTOT.* n. s. A savage inhabitant of the southern extremity of Africa. The word has been sometimes used generally to denote a rude, uncivilized person.

We have an instance of the same nature [in the love of our country] among the very Hottentots. One of these savages was brought into England, taught our language, and in a great measure polished out of his natural barbarity; but, upon being carried back to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his former acquaintance. Addison, Freeholder.

HOT'TENTOT Cherry. [maurocenia.] A plant.

Its characters are these: The flower has five oval petals, which spread open. It hath five stamina, which are situated between the petals; and in the centre is situated a roundish germen, crowned by a trifid stigma. The germen turns to an oval berry with one or two cells, each containing a single oval seed. There are three species, natives of the Cape of Good Hope, and one discovered at Jamaica. Chambers.

This quene unto the pleine rode,
Where that she hoved and abode.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

He walked through Holborne,
Three hours after the sunne was downe;
And walked up towards saynte Gyles in the felde;
He hoved styl, and there beheld,
But there he could not speede of his preyre.

Old Morality of Hycke Scorne.

He far away espide

A couple, seeming well to be his twaine,
Which hoved close under a forest side,
As if they lay in wait, or els themselves did hide.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 20.

Some part of those enormities —
The which in court continually hooded.

Spenser, Cotin Clout.

Ne joy of aught that under heaven doth hove,
Can comfort me. Spenser, Sonnet 88.

3. As a sea term, see HOVE, the preterite of heave.

HOVEL.† n. s. [diminutive of hope, house, Saxon; hof, fcl, German, from hof; Su. Goth. and Icel. hybile, a cottage.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So, likewise a hovel will serve for a room, to stacke on the peace, when harvest shall come. Tusser.

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre. Bacon.

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd.

Dryden.

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer. Ray on the Creation.

To HO'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.

And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HO'VEN. † part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumified. Hence, in some places, the expression of hoveen-bread. So the Swed. "broedet haefver, sig," the bread heaves or swells.

Tom Piper hath hoveen and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be so hoven, make Cisse to seek cheeks.

Tusser.

To HO'VER. † v. n. [hovia, to hang over. Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Sueth, haefwa, fluctuare; Icel. hefrig, fluctus, procella. Serenius.]

1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shakespeare, K. John.

Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hovers about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison.

Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior.

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light
Hovers, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him;
for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovereth in expectation of new worlds.

Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HO'VER.* n. s. [from the verb.] A protection; a shelter by hanging over.

The pond also breedeth crabs, eels, and shrimps; and in the beginning, oysters grew upon the boughs of trees, (an Indian miracle,) which were cast in thither to serve as a hover for the fish.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

HOVER Ground.* Light ground; so called in some countries. Ray, and Grose.

HOUGH. † n. s. [Sax. hox, hoh; usually written hock; though hough is still our northern word.]

HO'ULET. † See HOWLET.

HOULT. † n. s. [holt, Sax.] A small wood.

Obsolete. See HOLT.

Or as the wind, in *hoult*s and shady greaves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves.

Faifair.

HOUND. † n. s. [hund, Sax.; hund, Scottish; hunds, Goth. "Vox antiquissima, ac propterea multis linguis et dialect. communis." Serenius.] A dog used in the chase. Dr. Johnson says. At first it was the general name for dogs.

Nile ye give hooly title to *hound*s, neither caste ye your margaritis before swyne, lest parasite their defoule hem with her feet, and the *hound*s ben turned, and al to tere you.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. vii. 6.

Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels,
curs,

Are cleped all by the name of dogs.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and slew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryden.

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.

To HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor affectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bp. Bramhall.

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.

HOUR. † n. s. [heure, Fr.; hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat.
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.

Shakespeare.

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakespeare.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death.

Dryden, Æn.

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day.

Shakespeare.

Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man,
who kept good hours.

Tatler.

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countryman at midnight.

Addison.

4. In the plural, the stated times of devotion in the Romish church. [heures, Fr.; horæ canonice, Lat.]

None end is there of their babbling prayers, their — songs, hours, bells, ymages, &c.

Bale on the Revel. (1550), P. i.

The hermit, which his life here led
In strict observance of religious vow
Was wont his hours and holy things to bed.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 35.

HO'URGLASS. n. s. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hourglass than by the day's clearness.

Südney.

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment.

Bacon.

Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand

Is ebbing to the last. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field.

Bacon.

HO'URHAND.* n. s. [hour and hand.] That which performs the office of a hand in pointing out the hour of the day.

We have no perception of the motion of the index or hourhand of a clock: and yet this no perception, so many times repeated, becomes real perception, with respect to the minute hand.

Baxter on the Soul, ii. 303.

HO'URL.* n. s. A Mahometan nymph of paradise. ["They are called horhin, and in the singular number hora; and they are reclused, and well watched and guarded in their palaces, and their garments are wonderful: Thus he [Mahomet] boasts, and says further, that their beauty is as the light." Confut. of the Alcoran, 1652, p. 158.]

Suspend thy passage to the seats of bliss,
Nor wish for houries in Irene's arms.

Johnson, Trag. of Irene.

HO'URLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alcyone

Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.

We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us.

Swift.

HO'URLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress.

Shakespeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me!

Milton, P. L.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd.

Dryden.

HO'URPLATE. n. s. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HO'USAGE,* n. s. [from house.] A fee which a carrier, or other person, pays for laying up goods in a house. Chambers.

HO'USAL,* adj. [from house.] Domestick. Not now in use.

HO'USEHOLD. n. s. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny.

Shakespeare.

A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Of God observ'd

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst

A world devote to universal wreck. Milton, P. L.

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Sprat.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,

And second funerals on the former laid;

Let the whole household in one ruin fall,

And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all.

Dryden, Fab.

Learning's little household did embark,

With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,

Says grace before and after meat;

And calls, without affecting airs,

His household twice a-day to prayers. Swift.

2. Family life; domestic management.

An inventory, thus importing

The several parcels of his plate, his treasure,

Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.

Cornelius called two of his household servants.

Acts, x. 7.

For nothing lovelier can be found

In woman, than to study household good;

And good works in her husband to promote.

Milton, P. L.

It would be endless to enumerate the oaths among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.

HO'USEHOLD-BREAD,* n. s. Bread not of the finest quality. See CHEAT-BREAD.

If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively. Locke.

2. One who lives in plenty; one that exercises hospitality.

The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than house-raisers. Wotton.

3. One who lives much at home.

How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.

Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.

5. A housedog. Not in use.

Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

- HO'USEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.] Domestic; useful to a family.

His house, for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other housekeeping commodities, challenge the pre-eminence. Carew.

- HO'USEKEEPING. n. s. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.

I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakespeare.

His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shewed the master's hospitality. Prior.

- HO'USEL.† n. s. [hupl, Saxon, from hunsel, Gothic, a sacrifice, or hostia, dimin. hostiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.

Man and wife
Should shew their parish priest their life
Ones a yere, as saith the boke,
Ere any wight his house take.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6386.
He died within viii daies after without *house*ll or shifft, they say.

- To HO'USEL.† v. a. [huplan, Sax.] To give or receive the eucharist. Both the noun and verb are obsolete. Our old lexicography defines it specially, "to minister the communion to one that lieth on his death-bed."

Bullockar, and Cockeram.

He shall house me anone.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6437.
Ones a yere at the last it is lawfull to be *house*ll.

A priest, a priest, says Aldingar,
While I am a man alive,
A priest, a priest, says Aldingar,
Me for to *house*ll and shrieve.

Old Ballad of Sir Aldingar, Percy's Rel.
To shrieve, *house*ll, and anointe the sycke; to say dirige and masse, and burye the dead.

Confut. of N. Shaston, (1546), sign. G. iii.
The cardinal said mass, and gave the pax; then the king and queen descending were both *house*ll with one host parted between them at the high altar. Sir G. Duck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 26.

- HO'USELAMB.* n. s. [house and lamb.] A lamb kept up, to be fatted in the house.

- HO'USEWARMING. n. s. [house and warm.] A feast or merrymaking upon going into a new house.

- HO'USEWIFE.† n. s. [house and wife.] This is now frequently written huswife or hussy.

1. The mistress of a family.
You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.

I have room enough, but the kind and hearty housewife is dead. Pope to Swift.

2. A female economist.

Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.

Let us sit and mock the good housewife. Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be disposed equally. Shakespeare.

Farmers in degree,
He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.

Early housewives leave the bed,
When living embers on the hearth are spread. Dryden.

The fairest among the daughters of Britain shew themselves good stateswomen as well as good housewives. Addison.

3. [From houseaux, heuses, or houses, Fr.] Cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.

Thus fix'd, content he taps his barrel,
Exhorts his neighbours not to quarrel;—
Rides a sleek mare with purple housing,
To share the monthly club's carousing.

Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

- HO'USELING.† adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; house-warming. Dr. Johnson.—Not so; but sacramental, alluding to the marriages of antiquity, as Upton long since observed; which were solemnized sacramento ignis et aque; "the housing fire," i. e. sacramental fire, or fire used in that sacrament of marriage. See HOUSEL.

His owne two hands the holy knots did knitt,
That none but death for ever can divide;
His owne two hands, for such a turn most fitt,
The housing fire did kindle and provide,
And holy water thereon sprinkled wide;
At which the bushy teade a groomde did light,
And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 37.

- HOUSS. n. s. [from houseaux, or houses, Fr.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings. This word, though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six lions' hides, with thongs together fast,
His upper part defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast. Dryden.

- HOW.† adv. [hu, Sax.; hoe, Dutch; hue Goth. How is sometimes an expletive;]

as in 1 Cor. x. 1. "I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud;" where that is sufficient, without how. This redundancy obtains in common conversation.]

1. In what manner; to what degree.

How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? Exod. x. 3.

How much better is it to get wisdom than gold! and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver! Prov. xvi. 16.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out! and how oft cometh their destruction upon them!

Job, xxi. 17.

O how love I thy law! it is my meditation.

Psal. cxix. 97.

How many children's complaints, and mother's cries!

How many woful widows left to bow

To sad disgrace! Daniel, Civ. War.
Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Boyle.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not,

How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shakspeare.

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance

By ransom, or how else. Milton, S. A.

We examine the why and the how of things.

L'Estrange.

'Tis much in our power how to live; but not at all when or how to die. L'Estrange.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale? Shakspeare.

How chance the roses there do fade so fast? Shakspeare.

How is it thou hast found it so quickly?

Gen. xviii. 10.

4. For what price.

How a score of ewes now?

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

5. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds' feathers, if they could tell how; or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father?

Gen. xlv. 34.

Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born? How, and with what reproach shall I return?

Dryden, Æn.

7. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust? Job, iv. 19.

A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth.

Bentley.

8. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen! 2 Sam. i. 19.
How doth the city sit solitary as a widow! Lam. i. 1.

9. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South-sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents.

Bacon.

HOWE'ER. } adv. [how be it.] Nevertheless; less; notwithstanding; yet; however. Not now in use.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorrel,

Of heaven to deem so,

Howe I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature; this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not.

Hooker.

There was no army transmitted out of England, howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Davies on Ireland.

HOWDY.* n. s. [Ihre has observed, that the Su. Goth. iordgumma, a midwife, is properly iordgumma, from iord, childbirth, and gumma, a woman; as the vulgar in this country [Scotland] often express the name houndy-wife. Dr. Jamieson.] A midwife; so called in the north of England. Grose.

I once heard an etymon of howdy to the following effect: how d'ye; midwives being great gossipers! This is evidently of a piece with Swift's All egg's under the grate.

Brand, Popul. Antig. ii. 451.

HOWDYE.† [Contracted from how do ye, and sometimes augmented to how d'ye do.] In what state is your health? A message of civility.

I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howd'ye's, to those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.

The charge receiv'd, away run I,

And here, and there, and yonder fly,

With services, and *howd'ye*does;

Then home return full fraught with news.

Dodsley's Footman.

HOWEVER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds

In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,

To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,

Howe'er repented of. Shakspeare.

To trace the ways

Of highest agents, deem'd however wise.

Milton, P. L.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, however from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, however the chiefest.

Tillotson.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your excuse your love does little say; You might howe'er have took a fairer way. Dryd.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison on Italy.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, however I do not exclude it.

Atterbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, however, be a very useful inquiry.

Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

HOWITZ, or HOWITZER.* n. s. A kind of mortar or cannon, of German invention.

HOWKER, or HO'OKER.* n. s. [hulc, Sax. a galley, a pinnacle.] A vessel so called, much used by the Dutch.

Howkers carry from fifty to two hundred ton; and with a small number of hands will go to the East Indies; they are commonly navigated with two masts, viz. a main-mast and a mizen-mast; they tack soon and short, will sail well, and lie near the wind, and live almost in any sea.

Chambers.

TO HOWL.† v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—It is a word formed from the sound it expresses, and many languages have a similar term. Fr. huller, to howl or yell. Cotgrave. Su. Goth. and Icel. yla; Sax. gýllan; Gr. ἔλαω. See TO YELL.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise

I trembling wak'd. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, out the key.

Shakspeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deut. xxxii. 10.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.

Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.

Jer. xlviii. 31.

Each new morn

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows

Strike Heaven on the face. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Murder,

Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch. Shakspeare, Macb.

These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog dissected alive. Swift.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the public place.

Dryden, Æn.

HO'WLET.† n. s. [Fr. hulotte.] The vulgar name for an owl, Dr. Johnson says. It is sometimes called Madge-howlet, and Jenny-howlet. Cotgrave defines hulotte, "a Madge-howlet, or a small kind of hairy-legged and rough-footed owl, which hath sticking out on either side of her head a little tuft of feathers."

Estriches, daunsing apes, howlettes, meremaydes, and other odible monsters.

Bale on the Reuel. (1550.) P. iii. A. a. iii.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and howlet's wing. Shakspeare, Macb.

Out, thou howlet,

Thou should'st ha' given her a madge-owl, and then

Th' hadst made a present o' thyself.

Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

HO'WLING.* n. s. [from howl.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

As when a sort of wolves infest the night
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.

Waller.

2. The cry of one in distress.

The songs of the temple shall be howlings in that day.

Amos, viii. 3.

The damned use that word in hell,

Howlings attend it.

Shaksp. Rom. and Jul.

3. Any loud or horrid noise.

With hollow howlings they did chant

That hellish ode.

More, Poems, (1647,) p. 327.

A peal of thunder immediately follows, with dreadful howlings.

Dryden, K. Arthur.

Ho'wso.* adv. [abbreviation of howsoever.]

Although. Obsolete.

Let greatness go, so it go without thee:

And welcome come, howso unfortunate:

I will applaud what others do despise;

I love thee for thyself, not for thy state.

Daniel, Civil War, B. 2.

Howsoever.* adv. [how and soever.

"This is a word, which nobody would now use in verse; and not many, in good prose." Bp. Hurd on Addison's using it in an Epilogue.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWEVER.

Berosus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. Although.

The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

Shaksppeare.

Howve.* The old word for a hood. See Hood.

To Hox. v. a. [from hoh, Sax.] To hough;

to ham-string.

Thou art a coward,

Which hozes honesty behind, restraining From course required.

Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword hozed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow-soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Hoy.* n. s. [heu, Fr. a Dutch hoy. Cot-grave. Junius derives hoy from the French word; but it is, according to Skinner, probably from the Dutch hoogh, or Teut. hoch, hoy, q. d. a ship made high, considering her burthen. Mr. Pegge thinks that the vessel may have received its original name from stopping [i. e. from the naval term hoy, or ho, in the sense of stop,] at different small places in its voyage, to take in goods or passengers, when called to or hailed from the shore.—A learned writer on naval subjects calls this kind of vessel a huy: "The huyes, and lighters, hired for carrying of balast." Madyman's Maritime Politicks, 1691, p. 83.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;

From whence eftsoons arrived here three hoys

Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.

Spenser, F. Q.

To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard.

Watts, Logick.

Hoy.* interj. [old Fr. huy, huye, a term of the chase; huer, to shout, to cry out; Teut. hou; Lat. heus.] An exclamation sometimes used, like the old French term, to encourage dogs; sometimes, in the sense of driving away, i. e. be gone; and sometimes, like holla, for stop, halt. See To Ho.

Away, nasty C. E. transformed by Circe! Hoy! back to her styes!

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 164.

When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship? hoy! that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Engl. Lang. p. 16.

HU'BLESHEW, or HU'BLESHO.* n. s. A riotous assembly, according to Grose; a state of confusion, in the Craven dialect, where it is deriv'd from the Teut. hob-belen, inglomerare, and schowe, spectaculum.

HU'BUB.* n. s. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or hobnob. Dr. Johnson.—I may seem akin to the Teut. hobben tobben, to be in a bustle or hurry, to make a stir. But I rather consider it as a corruption of whoop and up; especially as the early use of the word is in the sense of a cry, a shout; though Dr. Johnson notices only that of a tumult, a riot; and yet his examples from Butler and Milton shew the word in the former meaning. Hubbub was also formerly written whoobub, and seems clearly to have implied, "the whoop is up," the hue and cry is making. See WHOOBUB, and WHOOP.]

1. A shout; a shriek; a loud or shrill noise.

They heard a noyse of many bagpipes shrill,
And shrieking hubbubs them approaching nere,
Which all the forest did with horreur fill.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 43.

Within this hour the whoobub

Will be all o'er the prison: I am then

Kissing the man they look for.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

An universal hubbub wild

Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence.

Milton, P. L.

Wolves raise a hubbub at her,

And dogs howl when she shines in water.

Hudibras.

2. A tumult; a riot.

They drove fast with him down the Strand, followed by a multitude of people:—all this was done of design for the lady's escape, which in that hubbub she made. Phinot's Philox. (1656), p. 239.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people.

Clarendon.

HUBBUB-BOO.* n. s. A word formed from the preceding, and denoting the cry or howling of the lower sort of Irish at funerals.

His followers and kin,

Who far and near came crowding in,

With hubbub-boos.

Irish Hudibras, (1689).

Not the sweet harp that's claim'd by Jews,

Nor that which to the far more ancient Welsh belongs,

Nor that which the wild Irish use,

Frightening e'en their own wolves with loud hubbub-boos.

Sam. Wesley, Pindaric on a Hog.

To HUCK.* v. n. [harceler, Fr. "to haggle, huck, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity." Cotgrave. From hucker, or hoecker, Teut. a huckster.] To haggle in purchasing goods.

A near, and hard, and hucking chapman shall never buy good flesh.

Hales, Sermon at the end of his Rem. (1673), p. 20.

HU'CKABACK.* n. s. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised. Dr. Johnson.—Rather, a kind of coarse table-linen, having the weft alternately crossed, to produce an uneven surface. Perhaps from the Teut. huyke, a cloak, a covering; Icel. huckl, a hood.

HU'CKLE.* n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. hucken, to sit down. Serenius notices the Icel. hackell, "tibia ablatis cruribus." The hip.

Though beaten down and wounded sore,
I' the fiddle, and a leg that bore
One side of him, not that of bone,
But much its better, th' wooden one;
Straight—getting up on stump and huckle,
He with the foe began to buckle. Hudibras, i. ii.

HU'CKLEBACKED. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HU'CKLEBONE.* n. s. [huckle and bone. See HUCKLE.] The hip-bone.

Nay, and that were the worst, we would not greatly care,
For bursting of her huckle-bone, or breaking of her chair,
But greater, greater is her grief.

Gamm. Gurton's Needle, (1551).

HU'CKSTER.* n. s. [Teut. hucker, huckster, hoecker, a pedlar, an huckster. V. Kilian.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

A merchant shall hardly keep himself from doing wrong, and an huckster shall not be freed from sin.

Ecclesi. xxvi. 29.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise.

Gov. of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.

South, Sermon. ii. 395.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,

And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,

The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,

But please expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

Gay.

There should be a confederacy of all servants, to drive those China hucksters from the doors.

Swift.

Those hucksterers or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass money is made current.

Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Some such desperate huckster should devise

To rowze thine hare's heart from her cowardice.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

To HU'CKSTER.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To expose to sale.

Some who had been called from shops and warehouses, without other merit, to sit in supreme counsils, (as their breeding was,) fell to huckster the commonwealth.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. iii.

To HU'CKSTER.* v. n. [from the noun.]

To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.

Swift.

Despotism itself is obliged to truck and huckster. The sultan gets such obedience as he can. He governs with a loose rein, that he may govern at all.

Burke, Speech on Concl. with America.

HU'CKSTERAGE.* n. s. [from huckster.]

Dealing; business.

The ignoble hucksterage of piddling tithes.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng.

HU'CKSTERESS.* n. s. [from huckster.] A she-pedlar. Sherwood.

HU'D.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of hood, that which covers.]

1. The husk of a nut or walnut. To hude, to take off the husk. Gloucestershire.

2. The side of the fire within the chimney; the back of the fire. A northern word. Grose, and Brockett. Written also hood.

To HU'DDLE.† v. a. [probably from hood, Dr. Johnson says. — But it is the German huddeln, to huddle up.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry. At twelve she rose with much ado; Her clothes were huddled on by two. Prior.

Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To cover up in haste. Young, fair, and good! ah, why should young, and fair,

And good be huddled in untimely grave? Edwards, Sonn. 37.

4. To perform in a hurry. I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain The lab'ring husband in his house restrain, Let him forecast his work with timely care, Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden, Virg.

5. To throw together in confusion. Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

But here, thou say'st the miseries of life Are huddled in a group. Young, Night Th. 8.

To HU'DDLE.† v. n.

1. To come in a crowd or hurry. Glance an eye of pity on his losses, That have of late so huddled on his back, Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaksp.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd The huddling brook to hear his madrigal, And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton, Comus.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To cuddle. A northern word. Westmoreland and Cleveland Dialects, &c. See TO CUDDLE.

HU'DDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanville.

Your carrying business in a huddle, Has forc'd our rulers to new-model. Hudibras.

Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle. Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Addison.

HU'DDLER.* n. s. [Germ. hudler.] One who throws things into confusion; a bungler.

A confused huddler of things. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HUE.† n. s. [Sax. hip, hipe, and also hu; our old authors usually write our word hew. Serenius notices the Suth. hy, the colour of the face, which in the Icelandic is the down of it, from hua, hya, to cover.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land Face of fair lady she before did view, Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue. Spenser, F. Q.

To add another hue unto the rainbow, Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shaks. K. John.

Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose. Milton, P. L.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton, P. L.

Your's is much of the camelion hue, To change the die with a distant view. Dryden.

2. [Huée, French; from huer, to shout after. Kelham deduces this from the old Fr. huchet, a huntsman's horn.] A clamour; a legal pursuit, an alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakspeare.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high; And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addis.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

HU'ED.* adj. [from hue.] Coloured. Written hewed. See HUE.

Phebus wex old, and hewed like laton. Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

Lastly stood war in glittering arms yclad, With visage grim, sterne looks, and blackly hewed. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

HU'ER. n. s. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

HUFF. n. s. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: huff; therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance. Quoth Ralph, honour's but a word To swear by, only in a lard; In others it is but a huff, To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe, Before the bluster of whose huff All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make Atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.

To HUFF.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff. In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the wind-pipe. Crew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality. The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr. Hough, You must not presume to huff us. Echard.

3. To offend. "She's easily huffed." Brockett's N. Country Words.

To HUFF.† v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

Therefore the maids and Roman matrons all, A shadowing veil before their face did wear; Their heavenly hue did throw no man to thral; They were content with plaine and decent gear, They hufft it not with painted frised hair. Mir. for Mag. p. 215.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward, A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

A thief and justice, fool and knave, A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras.

Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave, To knaves a fool, to cred'ulous fools a knave. Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say! What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

HU'FFER. n. s. [from huff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer, By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras.

HU'FFINESS.* n. s. [from huff.] Arrogance; petulance.

Their understandings being but creatural huffiness of mind, and an ambition of approving themselves the brochiers and maintainers of strange paradoxes. Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 248.

HU'FFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.

HU'FFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HU'FFISHNESS. n. s. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

To HUG.† v. a. [hegian, Saxon, to hedge, to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace. He bewept my fortune, And hugg'd me in his arms. Shakspeare.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade! L'Estrange.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess, And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtsey,
Baited with reasons not unpleasible,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snarcs. Milton, Comus.
We hug deformities, if they bear our names.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling book. Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse. South.

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery. Rouve.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

5. To applaud or congratulate one's self, on account of supposed advantage or superiority.

These shall be declared the rightful heirs of the kingdom, when the presumed sons of it, who hugged themselves as the only favourites of heaven, and warmed their hands by their own fantastick fires, who flew aloft, on the wings of imagination, and proudly looked down upon the modest and humble believer: — these, we have reason to think, shall then be cast out. Glanville, Sermon, p. 315.

Not to mention the wonderful delight of libel-ling men in power, and hugging yourself in a corner with mighty satisfaction for what you have done. Swift, Exam. No. 26.

HUG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him. Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

Knock down, was the word in the civil wars,
and we generally added to this skill the knowledge of the Cornish hug, as well as the grapple, to play with hand and foot. Taller, No. 175.

HUGE.† adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the old Fr. ahugue, “enorme, grand.” Roquefort.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness, not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America. Abbott.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge. Milton, P. L.

Part, huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there Leviathan,
Hugest of living creatures, in the deep
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land. Milton, P. L.

3. Great even to deformity or terrible- ness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakespeare.

Through forest huge, and long unravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown, he wanders waste. Thomson.

4. Having any quality in a great or high degree.

The mercy, and the pardon, and the huge moderation of that court. Hammond, Works, iv. 505.

He received admonition always as huge kindness.
Fell, Life of Hammond.

HU'GELY.† adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakespeare.

2. Greatly; very much.

Some think it is enough, in all instances, if they pray hugely and fervently. Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1653,) p. 134.

Their case is hugely suspicious, though they then repet and call for mercy. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 4. ch. 5.

A thing so hugely pleasurable. Hammond, Works, iv. 479.

It was hugely accidental, that Joash king of Israel, being commanded by the prophet to strike upon the ground, (2 Kings, xiii.) should strike no oftener than just three times. South, Sermon, i. 288.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HU'GENESS.† n. s. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

For though, in hugeness, that blacke fleet of Spain

Did farre surpass; yet was it farre more slow
In nimble stirrage waiting to and fro. Mir. for Mag. p. 820.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare.

HU'GEOUS.* adj. [from huge.] A low word for vast or enormous.

HU'GGERMUGGER.† n. s. [corrupted per- haps from hug er morcker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, hoker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous re- duplication. Hooke is likewise in Ger- man a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine. Dr. Johnson.—This expression was also written hucker mucker, with the same meaning of in secret. “They should not have lurked all this while in hucker mucker.” Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, 1565: fol. 88. “The matter hushed up in hucker mucker.” Watson, Quodlibets of Rel. and State, 1602, p. 44. This directs us to the German mucken, to mutter, to speak low, as the probable etymon of part of the word. “They — in hugger mugger muttred what they durst.” Mir. for Mag. p. 457. Dr. Ja- mieson, under the similar Scottish ex- pression hudge mudge, notices also the Icel. miugg, secretly, as the basis of it, which Ihre, he adds, inclines to deduce from the German mucken. Of the alli- ance of the former part of the expression, viz. hugger, hudge, or hucker, to the Teut. hugghen, and the Saxon hogan, to mind, to observe, which Skinner and Dr. Jamieson state, there may be doubt. To hugger appears to have been a cant term for to lurk about, in the sixteenth century; as Steevens remarks in a note on huggermugger, in Shakespeare.] Se- crecy; by-place.

The patrimony which a few
Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Spenser, Hüb. Tale.

We have done but greenly,
In huggermugger to inter him. Shaks. Hamlet.
But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work. Hudibras.
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.
L'Estrange.

HU'GUENOT.* n. s. [There have been many fanciful derivations of this word proposed. The most rational is that of Eignots, confederates, which Voltaire and others have given, from the German eidgnossen; of which it seems to be a corrupt pronunciation. The term of Huguenot had its rise in 1560; that of Eignot, at the beginning of that century. “Nouveau sujet de division dans Genève. Ce fut alors (1513) qu'on y vit naître les titres d'Eignots, et de Mammelus; par lesquels les deux parties se distinguèrent. Les Eignots étoient ceux qui tenoient pour la liberté de la patrie. — On les appelloient ainsi, parce qu'ils aimoient la liberté, comme les Cantons Suisses, qui s'appellent en leur langue eidgnossen, c'est à dire, confédé-rez. De là est venu vraisemblable-ment le nom des Huguenots,” Ruchat,
Reform. de la Suisse. vol. i. p. 447.]
One of the reformed religion in France;
a French Calvinist.

Mezeray tells us, that the name of Huguenots, or Fidnos, [so printed by Dryden, but evidently mistaken for Eidgnos or Eidgnossen], from whence it was corrupted, signifies league, or association, in the Swiss language; and was brought, together with the sect, from Geneva into France.

Dryden, Postcr. to the Hist. of the League.

HU'GUENOTISM.* n. s. [from huguenot. Fr. huguenoterie.] The profession or prin- ciples of an Huguenot.

Sherwood, and Bailey.

HU'GV.† adj. Vast; great; huge. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Carew. He had forgotten Dryden and others.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The wide waste places, and the hugie plain. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

Scarce had he finish'd, when with speckled pride,
A serpent from the tomb began to glide;
His hugy bulk on seven high volumes roll'd,
Blue was his breadth of back, but break'd with scaly gold. Dryden, Æn. v.

HU'ISHER.* n. s. [French, huissier.] An attendant; a door-keeper. Now written usher. See USHER.

It makes huishers serviceable men. B. Jonson, Forest.

HUKE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson merely cites the Fr. hugue; but that is from the Teut.
huycke. Our old lexicography calls it “a Dutch attire, covering the head, face, and all the body.” Bullokar, and Cocke-ram. Cotgrave describes it as a “Dutch “mantle, or a Dutch woman's mantle.”
The low Latin huca, as well as the Fr.
hugue, whether a mantle, hood, or robe, appears to have been worn by both sexes. See Du Cange and Lacombæ.
Kilian says that the Teut. huycke is the same as hoedke, from hoeden, to cover. Our word has been written also hyke.] A cloak; a mantle.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huke.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

HULCH.* n. s. [from the Su. Goth. hulking, convex.] A bunch; a bump; any round swelling, as a hulch in the back.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HULCHBA'CKED.* adj. [hulch and back.] Crook-backed; having bent or crump shoulders. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HU'LED.* adj. [from hulch.] Swollen; puffed up. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HU'LCY.* adj. [from hulch.] Much swelling; gibbous. Sherwood.

HU'LET.* See HOWLET.

HULL.† n. s. [Su. Goth. holk. Serenius and Ihre. From holka, to excavate; hol, hollow. Others, from the Gr. ὕλος. "Ships of burden, which the Roman authors call "naves onerariæ," and the Grecian φορτὴν and δρεμίδες, whence the name of our hulks may properly be derived, served for the conveyance of victuals, &c." Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. iv. 20. Dr. Johnson, under hull, admits that hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky. Yet here, in its proper place, no notice is taken of it. The Saxon hulce is described as a light, swift ship; the Teut. hulke, as a large and heavy one, "navis oneraria, navigium latum vastumque." Kilian.]

1. A ship: a vessel of burden; "a broad ship." Hulcoet.

The massy anchors wa'd,
One English ship, two hulks of Holland, aid
In such a pinch. Mir. for Mag. p. 414.

2. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakespeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbuthnot.

They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.

The sooty hulk

Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

3. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland, and the north of England; as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Moomouth's brava, the hulk Sir John,

Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

The hulk of a tall Brabentan, behind whom I stood in the corner of a street, shadowed me from notice. Bp. Hall, Spec. of his Life, p. 22.

TO HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hare. Ainsworth.

HU'LY.* adj. [from hulk.] This is a colloquial term in many parts of England, for a heavy, large, or unwieldy person.

HULL.† n. s. [huljan, Gothic, to cover. Dr. Johnson.—Germ. hullen, the same. See TO HELE, and TO HILL. "Hull of a nut, &c. That by which the nut is covered. Hull of a ship. That part which is covered in the water." Mr. H. Tooke,

Div. of Purl. ii. 383. In the former assertion, Mr. Tooke is supported by preceding etymologists; to the latter difference of opinion may be safely objected, in following Ihre's derivation of hulk, i. e. hulk, from the verb signifying to hollow out; a term, he says, originally applied to the trunks of trees hollowed out, the first vessel of the Scythians.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing: the outer covering; as, the hull of a nut covers the shell.

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature. Grew.

3. To lie a Hull. Spoken of a ship, either in a dead calm or a storm, when she cannot carry all her sails; or her masts are taken down or gone, and she is left at the direction of the waves.

We took in our sail, and lay a hull, tost sufficiently. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 398.

Like a ship at hull and becalmed.

Hammond, Works, iv. 655.

TO HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir, here lies your way.

—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shakespeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood.

Milton, P. L.

People walking down upon the shore saw somewhat come hulling toward them. L'Estrange.

TO HULL.* v. a.

1. To peel off the hull or husk of any seed. The male will hull the seeds for his consort with his bill, and present them to her in this state.

Latham, Synopsis, i. 310.

2. To fire cannon balls into the hull of a ship, within the point-plank rank.

Chambers.

HU'LLY. adj. [from hull.] Siliqueuse; husky. Ainsworth.

HU'LVER. n. s. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof flail for to make.

Tusser.

TO HUM.† v. n. [hommelen, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew

In summer's heat. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

Shakespeare.

The hum messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, You'll rue. Shaks.

3. To make a confused noise, like that of bustling crowds at a distance.

The city swarms intense: the publick haunt,
Full of each theme and warm with mix'd discourse,

Hums indistinct. Thomson, Winter.

4. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras.

I still acquiesc'd,

And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,

Nor snuffled treason. Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while;

but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

5. To make a low dull noise; to murmur.

Humming rivers, by his cabin creeping,

Rock soft his slumbering thoughts in quiet ease.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eccl. ii. 17.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,

And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

6. To express applause. Approbation was commonly expressed in publick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

Here the spectators hummed.

J. d. Ch. Baron. Gentlemen, this humming is not at all becoming the gravity of this court.

Trial of the Regicides, (1660,) fol. 49. b.

TO HUM.* v. a.

1. To applaud. See the last sense of the verb neuter.

The better sort among them will confess it a rare matter to hear a true edifying sermon in either of their great churches; and that such as are most hummed and applauded there, would be scarcely suffered the second hearing in a grave congregation of pious Christians.

Milton, Apology for Smectymnaus.

2. To sing low; to utter murmuringly or indistinctly.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

The wild wind hums the sullen song to night.

Rev. G. Butt, Ode, (1780.)

You takers of strong waters and tobacco, Mark this.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

8. A jest; a low trick; a hoax. [It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson notices, with Serenius, the Su. Goth. hum, an uncertain rumour, a slight suspicion; the origin of which is unknown.]

A landlord of Bath put upon me a queer hum.

Epig. Oxford Sausage.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears decide the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

See sir Robert — hum!

And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humain Fr.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew?

Milton, P. L.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd.

Milton, P. L.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMANATE.* part. adj. [from human.]

Invested with humanity.

Of your saying it followeth, that the bread is humanate or incarnate.

Abp. Crammer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 369.

HUMANÉ. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable.

Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness, and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Sprat.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMANENESS.* n. s. [from humane.] Tenderness; humanity. *Scott.*HUMANIST.† n. s. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian; a term used in the schools of Scotland, Dr. Johnson says, without any example, and without noticing that it is well used by our own writers for one skilled in the knowledge of human nature.

Physicians use commonly to intend some other art or practice, which they fancy more than their profession; for you shall have of them antiquaries, poets, humanists, statesmen, merchants, divines; and in every of these better seen than in their professions. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

Of all sorts of men in the world, none repute themselves, or are reputed by others, wiser, than the profound humanist and cunning politician.

Jurinus, Sin Stigmat. p. 603.

HUMANITY.† n. s. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Lat.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity.

Sidney.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shaks.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?

Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep?

Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ. The French so use les humanités.

If then we may spend some of young years in studies of humanity; what better and more sweet study is there for a young man than Poetrie?

Harrington, Apology of Poetry.

A man but young,

Yet old in judgement; theoretick and practical
In all humanity. Massing, Fatale Downy.

The most eminent scholars which England produced both in philosophy and humanity.

Warton.

To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, Fr.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe, —
And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.

Was it the business of magic to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HUMANKIND. n. s. [human and kind.]

The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterb.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;

Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HUMAN'TION.* n. s. [Lat. humatio, from humus, the ground.] Interment.

Chambers.

HUMBIRD. n. s. [from hum and bird.]

The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HUMBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield, Spencer.

Now we have shewn our power,

Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, till the point of death.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fullness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life.

By. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryd.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:

She should be humble, who would please;

And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

The example of the heavenly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,

An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.

To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] 1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shaksp. K. Lear.

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,

But first begs pardon. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chron.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reach nothing but repulse and hate?

Milton, S. A.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him.

Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth.

Addison, Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Frecholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!

Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains.

Hakewill on Providence.

HUMBLEBEE.† n. s. [humble and bee.]

What may be the true etymology of this word, I am in doubt. The humblebee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns an humble cow;

so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie, and Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Teut. hommolen, bombum edere, some think that the humblebee ought rather to be called bumblebee, from the Lat. bombus, on account of the deepness of its note. It is so called in many parts of England. See BUMBLEBEE. Chaucer, however, uses humbling in the sense of humming, murmuring, or muttering, which at once decides the etymon: "Like to the humbling after the clappe of a thundring." House of Fame, ii. 531.] A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybees steal from the humblebees,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thigs.

Shakspeare.

This puts us in mind once again of the humbees and the tinderboxes.

HUMBLEBEE. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. s. A fly that eats the humblebee. Ainsworth.

HUMBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouth.] Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouthed, but your heart

Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.

Shakspeare.

HUMBLENESS. n. s. [from humble.] Humility; absence of pride.

With how true humbleness

They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.
I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks. Sidney.

It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily. Bacon.

A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.

HUMBLEPLANT. n. s. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HUMBLER.† n. s. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others. Sherwood.

HUMBLES.† n. s. Entrails of a deer. See UMBLES.

HUMBLEST.† n. s. [old Fr. humblesse.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,
Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spens.

HUMBLING.* n. s. [from humble.] Humiliation; abatement of pride.

Yearly enjoin'd some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd.

Milton, P. L.

HUMBLY. adv. [from humble.]
1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humblly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakspeare.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humblly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humblly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;

And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humblly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HUMBUG.* n. s. An imposition: a very low word. Not used in any serious writings. See the eighth sense of HUM.

There is a word very much in vogue with the people of taste and fashion, which though it has not even the "penumbra" of a meaning, yet makes up the sum total of the wit, sense, and judgement of the aforesaid people of taste and fashion!—"This peace will prove a confounded humbug upon the nation.—These theatrical managers humbug the town damnably!"—Humbug is neither an English word, nor a derivative from any other language. It is indeed a blackguard sound, made use of by most people of distinction! It is a fine make-weight in conversation, and some great men deceive themselves so egregiously as to think they mean something by it!

Student, vol. 2. (1751), p. 41.

HUMDRUM.† adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone. Dr. Johnson.—From hum, and the Icel. drums, dull, melancholy; or droma, to proceed slowly.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.

I was talking with one humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison, Whig-Exam. No. 3.

To HUME'CT. } v. a. [from humecto, Lat.
To HUME'CTATE. } humecter, Fr.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil. Howel, Voc. For.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wiseman, Surgery.

HUMECTA'TION. n. s. [from humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HUMECTIVE.* adj. [from To humect.] Having the power to wet or moisten.

These fountain-waters have an humective and vegetative virtue within them, to water and to make things prosper and grow up.

Purtheneia Sacra, (1633), p. 218.

HUMERAL. adj. [from humeral, Fr. from humerus, Lat.] Belonging to the shoulder.
The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBA'TION. n. s. [from hum and cubo, Lat.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Bp. Bramhall.

HUMID. adj. [from humide, Fr. humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue,
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton, Comus.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

Newton, Opticks.

HUMIDITY. n. s. [from humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpon. Shakspeare.

O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb
Infect the air. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To HUMILE.* v. a. [old Fr. humilier.] To humiliate or humble. Obsolete.

Davyd ought to humile himself.

Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 4.

HUMILIA'TION. n. s. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton, P. L.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown, Vulg. Err.

With tears

Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. s. [from humilité, Fr.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive, With whom my soul is any jot at odds, More than the infant that is born to night; I thank my God for my humility.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive.

King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder At their wish'd journey's end. Denham's Sophy.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets, for their airy steep, Require foundations in proportion deep; And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot, As to the nether heavens they drive the root; So low did her secure foundation lye, She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avowed the present storm. Davies.

HUMMER. n. s. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.

HUMMING.* n. s. [from To hum.]

1. The noise of bees or flies.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.

So weary bees in little cells repose; But if night robbers lift the well-stored hive, An humming through the waxen city grows. Dryden.

Hoarse hummings of unnumber'd flies.

Dr. Warton, Ode to Evening.

2. An inarticulate sound.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming, And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.

3. A dull, unmeaning noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate hummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glansville.

HUMMING Ale.* Sprightly ale; probably from the spirituous liquor called hum, which ale perhaps displaced; or from a mixture of hum with the malt liquor, as spirits are now sometimes mixed with it. See the seventh sense of HUM.

With humming ale encouraging his text.

Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Rum, brandy, gin with choicest smack, From Holland brought, Batavia's rack; All these will nought avail, To cheer a truly British heart, And lively spirits to impart, Like humming nappy ale.

Song ascribed (perhaps inaccurately) to Gay.

HUMMING Bird.* See HUMBIRD.

HUMMOCK.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of humq.] A little hill; rising ground.

Point Possession bore N. N. E. about three miles distance, and some remarkable hummocks on the north. Hawkesworth's Voyages.

HUMMUMS.* n. s. pl. [Persian, hummum, a hot-house. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 318.] Sweating-places, or baths. The word is used by us only in the plural. Artificial grots, having also hummums of stone paved with white marble.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 169.

The hummums (or sweating-places) are many, [at Cazyb in Persia.]

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 211.

HUMORAL.* adj. [Fr. humoral. Cotgrave.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HUMORIST.* n. s. [humoristo, Italian; humoriste, Fr.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

Many of the rest were as bad men as princes; humorists rather than of good humours.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

Extraordinary men of arts, in all ages, are generally observed to be the greatest humorists: they are so full of the sweetness of their own conceptions, that they become morose when they are drawn from them. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 336.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

Do ye see a nice humorist, that will not dress a dish, nor lay a cloth, nor walk abroad on a Sunday, and yet make no conscience of cozening his neighbour on the workday?

Bp. Hall, Sermon. The Hypocrite.

3. One who is fond of jesting; a wag; a droll.

An infectious collection of base vices and fashions of men and women — will be of use only among humorists for jests and table-talk.

Sir T. Bodley, Lett. to Sir F. Bacon.

These poor gentlemen endeavour to gain themselves the reputation of wits, and humorists, by such monstrous conceits as almost qualify them for Bedlam. Addison, Spect. No. 35.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist.

Spectator.
Shakespeare's heroes, and Jonson's humorists.

Tatler, No. 12.

4. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HUMOROUS.* adj. [from humour.]

1. Moist; humid; damp; dewy.

The humorous fogs deprive us of his sight.

Drayton, Baron's Wars, C. 1.

Every lofty top, which late the humorous night Bespangled had with pearl.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

He hath hid himself among those trees, To be consorted with the humorous night.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

2. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marsyas was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satyr Marsyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

3. Capriciously; irregularly; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight But when her humorous ladyship is by,

To teach thee safety. Shakespeare, K. John.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the spring of day.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

O, you awake then: come away, Times be short, are made for play; The humorous moon too will not stay: What doth make you thus delay? B. Jonson.
Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind, Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind.

Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts, Logic.

4. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly, Lies all neglected, all forgot; And pensive, waw'ring, melancholy, Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

HUMOROUSLY. adv. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously, concisum, argentum in titulos facisq; minutus. Addison.

HUNGER.† n. s. [hungep, Sax. the past participle of hynþian, to hunger, according to Mr. H. Tooke. It is, however, the Su. Goth. hunger, whence also the Dutch honger. See also To HUNGER.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach.

Quincy,
Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deut. xviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, velleates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger.

Grew.
Something viscous, fat, and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicity we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

Decay of Piety.
For hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

To HUNGER.† v. n. [M. Gothick, Hungarian, pronounced hungrian; Sax hyn-grian.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
As he returned into the city, he hungered.

St. Matt. xxi. 18.

Widely they gape, and to the eye roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Conley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Do'st thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!

Stay but a little. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.
I content me,

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hungering more to do my father's will.

Milton, P. R.

To HUNGER.* v. a. To famish; as, to hunger a person, that is, not to allow sufficient food. Common in the north of England; and used, perhaps, in other places.

Bacon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungerly they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread.

Dryden, Juv.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare.

By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Temple.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation.

Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakespeare.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil.

Smalbridge, Serm.

HUNKS. n. s. [hunskur, sordid, Icelandic.]

Purchas, Pilgrim, (1617), p. 409.

His countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their bums.

Hudibras, i. ii.

To HUNT. v. a. [hūntian, Saxon, from hunt, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job, xxxviii. 39.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Ps. cxi.

The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that faint would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

On the old pagan tombs, masks, hunting matches, and Bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A huntsman. [Sax. hunca, a hunter.]

This is the ancient usage of the substantive, which remained in our lexicography in Charles the First's time. "A hunt, or huntsman." Sherwood's Dictionary. Dr. Johnson has not noticed it.

Ready for to ride

With hunte and horne, and houndes him beside. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd

By sovereign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden, Hind & Panther.

3. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

4. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HUNTER.† n. s. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chases, and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind.

Milton, P. L.
Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore.

Dryden, Æn.
This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manlius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron.

Addison on Italy.
Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. A hunting-horse, as it was formerly called. The name of hunter, applied to the horse, is modern: as, he rides a good hunter.

HUNTING.* n. s. [Sax. huntung, venatio.]
The diversion of the chase.

When we grow up to men, we have another succession of sanguinary sports; in particular, hunting. I dare not attack a diversion, which has such authority and custom to support it.

Guardian, No. 61.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

HUNTINGHORN.* n. s. [hunting and horn.]

dukes for a hunting-seat, but now converted into an inn. Gray, Lett.

HUNTRRESS.* n. s. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou, thrice crowned queen of night, survey

With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakspeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-hafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton, Comus.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
The immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

HUNTSMAN. n. s. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser, Sonn.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chase, than to the master.

L'Estrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP.* n. s. [from huntsman.]
The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, huntsmanship, or play. Donne.

hand the skin of a wild beast. Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 228.

HURDEN.* n. s. [from being made of hurds, or coarse flax.] A coarse kind of linen. It is used adjectively, as linen, woollen, and words of that kind very frequently are. Mason.

It is, when he is reaping, making hay, or when he is hedging in his hurden flock. Shenstone.

HURDLE.* n. s. [hýpbel, Sax. The past participle of hýpan, to keep, according to Mr. H. Tooke. Serenius, long before, had thus deduced the Icel.
hurdr, crates, from the verb hyrda, to keep. Hence the Germ. hurde, a hurdle; and the old Fr. hourde, which has also hordel, "hordelies, des claires pour les champs, crates." Lacombe.]

1. A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

The sled the tumbrel, hurdes and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden, George.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Seward, Sonnets, &c. p. 173.

HURDS.* n. s. [See HARDS.] The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

HURDY-GURDY.* n. s. [I know not whence it is derived.] A stringed instrument, often heard in the streets of London;
though, as Mr. Ritson has observed, not in the hands of the natives; the strings of which are agitated by the friction of a wheel. It is played by foreign mendicants, most frequently women.

Whom have we here? a sightly swain and sturdy!

Hum! plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy. Foote's Midas.

To HURL.* v. a. [from hurwl, to throw down, Icelandic; or, according to Skinner, from whirl. Dr. Johnson.—
To whirl, and to hurl, are both derived from the Su. Goth. hurra, to turn round rapidly; Sax. hpreppan; and I should imagine hurl to be the elder of the two.
Wicliffe uses it in the sense of beating vehemently, whirling round with violence. "The wyndis blewten, and thei hurlden agen that hous, and it felde down." St. Matt. vii. 27. "The flood was hurld to that house." St. Luke, vi.
Hence our hurlwind. See also To HURLE.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heavens have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numb. xxxv. 20.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. 1 Chron. xii. 2.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones, B. Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton, P. L.

She strikes the lute; but if it sound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd,
Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden, Juv.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler,
French, to make an howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from watry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of heaven. Milton, P. L.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts;
to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away: every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

To HURL.* v. n. To move rapidly; to whirl.

The very streams look languid from afar,
Or through the unshelter'd glade impatient seem
To hurl into the covert of the grove. Thomson, Summer.

HURL.* n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of casting or throwing.

The gods with horror and amaze look'd down,
Beholding rocks from their firm basis torn,
Mountain on mountains thrown,
With threatening hurl that shook th' etherial firmament. Congreve, Ode on taking Namur.

2. Tumult; riot; commotion. [hurler, Fr.]

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

After this hurtle the King was faine to flee
Northward in post, for succour and relief! Mir. for Mag. p. 358.

HURLBAT. n. s. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat.
Ainsworth.

HURLER.* n. s. [from hurl.]
1. One who throws, or hurls.

The stone that strikes the wall
Sometimes bounds back on th' hurler's head.

Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 48.

This cursing Shimei, a hurler of stones as well as a railer. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnæus.

2. One that plays at hurling.

The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

HUR'LEWIND.† n. s. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not now in use.

Like scatter'd down thy howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown.

Sandys, Job.

No sudden hurlwinds shall your bodies cast
On trembling earth. Sandys's Christ's Pass, p. 13.

HUR'LY.† } n. s. [from the French
HUR'LYBURLY. } hurlubrelu, inconsiderately. Dr. Johnson. — "Hurly-burly means, literally much ado. It was a far more frequent expression of the English, than of the Scottish writers, during the age of Elizabeth and James. Burly signifies gross, great, Bullokar. Burly-brand, a great sword, or a great fury, Coles. Hurler, Fr. to do as others; to be wicked with the wicked, Dict. Comique. And see hurler, in Menage. Johnson is content to derive this expressive term, from the modern Fr. hurlu-burlu, not hurlubrelu; for it is not to be found in the old French word-books." Chalmers, Gloss. to Sir David Lyndsay's Works. — Mr. Chalmers and Dr. Johnson have overlooked a distinction of burly, in our language, for boisterous and loud; which I have illustrated in its place. Hurly-burly, therefore, may fairly be deduced from the Fr. hurler, to howl, to make a great cry, and the Teut. borlen, to make a noise; forming "a name which intimates the sound of that it signifieth; as hurliburly, for an uprose and tumultuous stirre." Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, 1577. Sign. C. iij.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakspeare.

methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakspeare.
All places were filled with tumult and hurly-burly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles, Hist.

When, I pray you, were these classical assemblies, and these seditious stirs and hurlyburlies of Martinists?

Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whitgift, p. 63.

HUR'LY-BURLY.* adj. Tumultuous.

Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakspeare.

In the hurly-burly days of queen Elizabeth.

Persecutio Undecima, (1648), p. 11.

HURRA'H.* interj. [probably from the Goth. hurra, to agitate, to move violently or rapidly.] A shout of joy, or triumph, or applause, or encouragement: at first, perhaps, the shout of soldiers at the onset.

HURRICANE.† } n. s. [huracan, Spanish;
HURRICANO. } ouragan, French; originally from the Su. Goth. hurra, to move rapidly or violently. Our word was, at first variously written herocane, and herricano, as well as hurricane, and hurricano.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We believed a herocane was begun, a vast or unwonted tumour in the air.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 41.

The winds are not only wild in a storm, but even stark mad in an hurricane.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 122.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes.

Burnet, Theory.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;

There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison.

HUR'RIER. n. s. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

To HUR'RRY.† v. a. [hepzan, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Goth. horra, hurra, or hyra, to agitate, to drive, to move violently.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

Shakspeare.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march and hurried meeting here?

Milton, P. L.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it.

South.

That hurried o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore.

Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.

Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away.

Rowe, Royal Convert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination.

Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.

To HUR'RRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.

Dryden.

HUR'RRY. n. s. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet.

Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection.

South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street.

Gay, Trivia.

HUR'RY-SKURRY.* adv. [an expression noticed in Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Etym. Dict. for a tumult, an uproar; "from the Su. Goth. hurra, cum impetu circumagi, & skorra, sonum stridulum edere, or skura, increpare, objurgare." We may look upon it, like hurly-burly, formed to signify its own meaning. Confusedly; in a bustle; with noise and tumult.

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
Run hurry-skurry round the floor,
And o'er the bed and tester clamber.

Gray, Long Story.

HURST.† n. s. [Sax. hyrpt, silva; low Lat. hursta, Du Cange. Horscht, hurst, virgultum, silva humiles tantum frutices preferens, frutetum. Kilian. Mr. H. Tooke derives it from the Sax hyrptan, to adorn; and says, that hurst is applied only to places ornamented by trees. It is true that hurst, or hyrst, is used by our old writers for a wood; and many places in this country, that have this word for part of the name, were so called from being near woods; and in the margin of Drayton's Polyolbion, from which the example of the word is cited, hurst is explained a wood. In the north of England, it denotes a bank or sudden rising of the ground. The term, as Dr. Jamieson has observed on the Scottish usage of the word, may have been primarily used to denote the barrenness of ground, as shewn by its producing only twigs and brushwood, from the Icel. hreygs, hyrs, in the pl. rendered loca virgultis obsita, et sterilia. Teut. horst. From this sense of it, an under-wood might easily become the next, and then generally a wood; a rising ground, planted with trees.] A small wood; a knoll covered with trees.

To her neighbouring chase the courteous forrest show'd

So just-conceived joy, that from each rising hurst, Where many a goodlie oak had carefullie been nurst,

The Sylvens in their songs their mirthfull meeting tell. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

To HURT.† v. a. preter. I hurt; part. pass. I have hurt. [hyrc, wounded, Sax. heurter, to strike, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of hyrptan, injuria afficere, vexare. Mr. H. Tooke. — But I must add the Teut. horten, which means the same as our hurt.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Revel. ii. 11.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpriz'd by unjust force, but not enthral'd.

Milton, Comus.

The Adonis of the sea is so called because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakspeare, Othello.

It breeds contempt

For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den.

Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.

See thou hurt not the oil and wine.

Revel. vi. 6.

HURT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Harm; mischief.

The hurt thereby is greater than the good.

Spenser.

I have slain a man to my hurt. Gen. iv. 23.
I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker on Learning.

2. Wound or bruise.

Where is he wounded?

— There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts i' th' body.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst, and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and science, 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Prior.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the king. Esra. iv. 22.

HURTER.† n. s. [from hurt.]

1. One that does harm.

2. A wounder. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

3. The shoulder of the axle against which the nave of the wheel knocks. [Fr. heurter, to knock.] Brockett, North Country Words.

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful hazle in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun.

Dryden, Georg.

HURTFULLY.† adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously. Sherwood.

HURTFULNESS.† n. s. [from hurtful.] Mischievousness; perniciousness.

Sherwood.

TO HURTLE.† v. n. [heurter, French; urtare, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner considers hurtle as derived from hurl; or perhaps from the old Fr. heurteleur for heuler, to push, or hit violently against. In the sense of encountering with violence, the word has been probably adopted from the Italian urtare, as it is a common phrase in that language for rushing on the enemy, "urtare contro i nemici." See Upton's note on Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.]

1. To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jostle; to meet in shock and encounter. Hammer. "To stumble against a thing." Pr. Parv.

VOL. II.

They drew out their swords, and hurtled together with violence.

Hist. of Prince Arthur, P. i. ch. 28.

Kindness

Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurling,
From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. To clash; to rattle.

The noise of battle hurtled in the air.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Iron sleet of arrowy shower
Hurtles in the darken'd air. Gray, Ode vii.

3. To rush forward.

Sudden upriseth from her stately place
The royal dame, and for her coche doth call:
All hurtlen forth. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.

4. To wheel round; to turn about quickly.

His approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurtle round in warlike gyre.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 8.

TO HURTLE.† v. a. [To move with violence or impetuosity. This is probably the original of hurl. Dr. Johnson. — See the etymology of the verb neuter, and the fourth sense of it. But the original meaning of hurtle seems to be to push, to thrust, in an active sense.]

1. To push with violence.

They hurtleden the schip, [they thrust in the shippe, Transl. of 1578: they ran the ship aground, Pres. Translation.] Wicliffe, Acts, xxvii. 41.
He foimeth on his foe with a tronchoun,
And he him hurtleth with his horse adoun.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To move with violence, or rather with velocity; to whirl round; to brandish.

His harmful club he gan to hurtle high,
And threaten battle to the faery knight.

Spenser, F. Q.

To toss the spear, and in a warlike gyre
To hurtle my sharp sword about my head.
Selimus, Emp. of the Turkes, (1594.)

HURTLBERRY.† n. s. [hiot bar, Danish; heopotbeþg, Sax.] Bilberry; bacca vitis idææ.

HURTLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;
For simple goodness shined in his eyes. Sidney.
[She] joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shorter every gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.] Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity. Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. s. [from hurtless.] Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND.† n. s. [hossband, master, Danish; from house and bonda, Runick, a master; hurbonda, the master of the house or family, and also a husband; hup-bunda, Sax. Chronicon; "husbonde, Su. Goth. from hus, domus, and bonde, colonus, maritus, titulus olim honorificus."]

Serenius. "The Su. Goth. bonde denotes the head of a family, as opposed to a servant; a husband, as opposed to a wife; a citizen or private person, as opposed to a prince; an inhabitant of the country, as opposed to those who live in towns; and also one who possesses his own inheritance, as distinguished from those who cultivate the property of others." Dr. Jamieson. An allusion to the etymology, as Mr. Malone also has observed, occurs in Shakspeare: "You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house." Meas. for Measure.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shaks. Tam. of the Shrew.
Why, woman, your husband is in his old lues again: he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn.

Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband. Locke.

2. The male of animals.

Ey'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold. Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband; owner of a lordship ill husbanded.

Davies on Ireland.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands we are of so tender a fortune.

Collier on Fame.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.

Husband's work is laborious and hard. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds. Bacon.

In those fields

The painful husband plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields.

Hakewill on Providence.

If continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work. Dryden, Georg.

TO HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with an husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded?

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

If you shall prove

This ring was ever her's, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. Shakspeare.

In my right,

By me invested, he compeers the best.
— That were the most, if he should husband you.

Shakspeare.

2. To manage with frugality.

It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakspeare.
The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech. Herbert.

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he sits at a great rent. Bacon.

HU'SBANDABLE.* adj. [from To husband.] Manageable with frugality. Sherwood.

HU'SBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears.

Shakespeare, K. John.

HU'SBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.

Bare plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart;
And compass it then, is a husbandly part. Tusser.

HU'SBANDMAN.† n. s. [husband and man.]

1. A master of a family. See HUSBAND.
Not now in use.

Ask'd if in husbandry he aught did know,

To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow,

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food. Spenser.

Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shaks. Hen. V.

Her plenteous womb

Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.

The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh, Hist.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;

The candles are all out. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestic affairs.

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shaks.

HUSH.† interj. [Without etymology. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave partly points out the etymology in his translation of the French housche; “an interjection whereby silence is imposed; husht, whist, ist, not a word for your life.”

This leads us to hist and whist, from which we have also whish. See HIST, and TO WHIST. Chaucer uses hust for whist. To hust occurs in the old dictionary of Palsgrave, in the sense of still; and soon afterwards, in the dictionary of Huloet, the word became husht; “To husht, or to keep silence: husht, hold thy peace.” So Cotgrave, husht. It finally became hush.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The thing hath done you wrong; but hush!
'tis so. Shakespeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare, Tempest.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;

Another seem'd envious or coy;

Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;

But at these strangers presence every one did hush.
Spenser, F. Q.

TO HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husht, and nought at all to say. Shaks.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.
Shakespeare.

Speak softly;

All's husht as midnight yet. Shakespeare, Tempest.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me.

Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Will thou then talk thus to me? Will thou then Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love?

Otway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;

He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her sire at length is kind,

Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;

Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.

Dryden.

The court was hushed, and a whisper ran.

Addison.

TO HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hushed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HU'SHONEY.† n. s. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dexterous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

I expect hushmoney to be regularly sent for every folly or vice any one commits in this whole town; and hope I may pretend to deserve it better than a chamber-maid or a valet de chambre. Tatler, No. 26.

HUSK. n. s. [huldsch, Dutch, or huysken, from huy.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shell shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

Shakespeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thy food shall be

The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat

Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unsparing hand. Milton, P. L.

Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil

O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain.
Dryden.

Some, when the press

Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Philips.

Barley for pisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

TO HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HU'SKY.† adj. [from husk.]

1. Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found

A husky harvest from the grudging ground.
Dryden, Virg.

Call all such husky and curious arts and studies, the recreations and entertainments of children, and the weak supports of the gainful trade of cheating and imposture. Spencer on Prod. p. 404.

With timely care

Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer must. Philips.

2. Hoarse; having a rough or dismal sound; having a cough, formerly hesky, and hosty, “tuscicus,” Ort. Vocab. See HAUST.

Here the mouth of sad Melpomene

Is wholly bent to tragedy's discourse:—
Here means the wrathful muse, in seas of tears,
And loud laments, to tell a dismal tale;
A tale wherein she lately hath bestow'd
The husky humour of her bloody quill.

Trag. of Saliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Proser was dead, and Sergeant Quirkit
Grew husky, and had left the circuit.

Anstey, Pleader's Guide.

HUSSA'R.* n. s. [Fr. houssart, hussart, hussard; low Lat. huszaro; Germ. husar.] Originally an Hungarian horse-soldier, light-armed. The name appears to have been given also to the driver of a chariot, who perhaps was armed. At the close of the seventeenth century some regiments of French cavalry were called hussars, and soon afterwards the word became common in our language.

Two Hungarian miles from Friestat lies Banca; we being here upon the 18th of March: the hussar, who drove our chariot hither, after we had supped went out. Brown's Travels, &c. (1685), p. 56.

They were a sort of tame hussars, that were allowed in our cities, like the wild ones in our camp; who had all the privileges belonging to us, but at the same time were not tied to our discipline or laws. Tatler, No. 56.

He made his breeches and his doublet of one continued piece of cloth, after the manner of the hussars. Spectator, No. 576.

HU'SSITE.* n. s. One of the followers of John Huss of Prague, the reformer, and the contemporary of Wicliffe; whom Fox pithily describes as "a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellentie favoured for his worthe life."

Procopius despised the pope's excommunication, and the crusado he had published against the Hussites; and overcame the forces, which the emperor had sent against them.

Pelletreus, Ecc. Hist. 15. Cent.

HU'SSY.† n. s. [corrupted from housewife: taken in an ill sense.]

1. A sorry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.

Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade.

Southern, Innocent Adultery.

2. A kind of book, used by women for holding thread and other small materials. Sometimes called a huswife.

HU'STINGS.† n. s. [hustings, Sax.; husthing, Goth. and Icel. From hus, domus, and thing, forum, conventus. Serenius. From hur, domus, and ding, res, causa, q. d. domus caesarum. Lye. From hýprt and ding, q. d. supremum judicium. Somner.]

1. A council; a court held.

From the sheriff's court in the city of London, a writ of error lies to the court of hustings before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs. Blackstone.

2. The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

I stood on the hustings (except when I gave my thanks to those who favoured me with their votes) less like a candidate, than an unconcerned spectator of a public meeting. Burke, Speech at Bristol.

To HU'STLE.† v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle. Dr. Johnson.—Not so, but from the Teut. hutsen, hutselen, to shake together.] To shake together in confusion.

To HU'STLE* v. n. To shrug up the shoulders. A northern term. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, and Grose.

HU'SWIFE.† n. s.

1. A bad manager; a sorry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense, Dr. Johnson says. Huswife is the early form of writing housewife, and not a corruption of it, as he asserts; for if it be, by the same rule husband would be a corruption of houseband. It is the Sax. hur and wife. Our old writers use huswife, in a good sense, as the mistress of the house. See the second meaning.

Bianca

A huswife, that, by selling her desires, Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

Good huswife provides, ere a sickness do come, Of sundry good things in her house to have some. Tusser.

To HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.

But huswifing the little Heaven had lent, She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent; And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two, To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HU'SWIFELY.* adj. [from huswife.] Thrifty; frugal; becoming a housewife.

Good huswifely physick. Tusser.

His [Tusser's] huswifely admonitions — are not particularly addressed to the farmer.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 307.

HU'SWIFELY.* adv. Thriftily; like a good housewife or husband. Barret.

HU'SWIFERY.† n. s. [from huswife.]

1. Management good or bad.

Good huswifery trieth

To rise with the cock;

All huswifery lieth

Till nine of the clock. Tusser.

Thy good lady — therein reap'd

The just reward of her high huswifery;

To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,

When she was far. B. Jonson, Forest.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.

If cheeses in dairie have Argus his eyes,

Tell Cisle the fault in her huswifery lies. Tusser.

HUT.† n. s. [hutte, Saxon; hutte, Germ.; hute, French.]

1. A poor cottage.

Our wandering saints, in woeful state,

To a small cottage came at last,

Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,

Who kindly did these saints invite,

In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,

How many shrink into the sordid hut

Of cheerless poverty!

Thomson.

2. A temporary building to lodge soldiers.

To HUT.* v. a. [Fr. huter.] A military expression: as, to hut troops, i. e. to lodge them in huts.

HUTCH.† n. s. [hpæcce, Sax.; huche, French.]

1. Not simply a corn-chest, as given by Dr. Johnson, but also a chest of any kind; a coffer, called in the north country, (as Huloet also says under hutch), an ark. See ARK.

In their tabernacles, ampers, hutches; or as a mystery in their locked closets.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 255.

The hutch and the boulder, the furnace and copper. B. Jonson, Masques.

The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks. Mortimer.

Archbishop Chichelê gave a borrowing chest to the university of Oxford, which was called Chichelê's hutch. Warton, Notes on Milton's Comus.

2. Among farmers, a hollow trap for taking vermin alive; and also a kind of case for keeping rabbits.

3. In Kent, a small cart. Grose.

To HUTCH.* v. a. [from the noun.] To hoard; to lay up as in a chest.

In her own loins,

She hutch'd the all-worshipt ore, and precious gems. Milton, Comus.

HUTCHINSONIAN.* n. s. One of the followers, in this country, of the philosophical and religious opinions of Mr. John Hutchinson of Yorkshire, in the last century; whose notion was, that a plenum and the air are the principles of the Scripture philosophy, and whose scheme of reformation related to the original language of the Old Testament and the true sense of the Bible.

This gentleman — possibly may not call himself an Hutchinsonian, though I have presumed to introduce him here, from a similarity both in the letter and spirit of his sermon to those of that brotherhood.

Heathcote, A Word to the Hutchinsonians, (1756), p. 15.

To Huzz.† v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur. "Strident apes; the bees huzz." Barret.

HUZZA'.* interj. [from the Hungarian hussars, who loudly shout at the onset in battle, according to some; from hosanna, the acclamation of wishing well, according to others.] An exclamation of joy, or triumph.

Liberty, Property, and Old England, for ever, huzza!

Goldsmith, Ess. 24.

HUZZA'. n. s. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbutnot.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert; Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart: One self-approving hour whole years outweighs Of stupid stagers and of loud huzzas. Pope.

To HUZZA'.† v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale, On the huzzing mob shall still prevail.

King, Cookery.

With that I huzzed, and took a jump across the table. Taylor, No. 45.

To HUZZA'. v. a. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.

HY'ACINTH. n. s. [ἵακινθος, Gr.; hyacinthe, Fr.; hyacinthus, Lat.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.

The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,

Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope, Odys.

2. A gem.

The hyacinth is the same with the lapis lycyrius of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour.

Hill on Fossils.

HY'ACINTHINE.† adj. [ἵακινθινος, Gr.] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

[His] hyacinthine locks

Round from his parted forelock manly hung.

Milton, P. L.

His curling locks like hyacinthine flowers.

Couper, Odyssey.

HY'ADES. } n. s. [ἵαδες, Gr.] A watery

HY'ADES.* constellation.

Then sailors quarter'd heaven, and found a name For every fix'd and every wandering star;

The pleiads, hyads. Dryden, Georg.

HY'ALINE. adj. [ὄαλος, Gr.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heaven-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton, P. L.

HYBRID.* adj. [Gr. ἕβρις, ἕβριδος; Lat. hybrida; from ἕβρις, as it signifies a kind of adultery.] Mongrel; of different species: applied to plants as well as animals.

We should by all means deal with our separatists, and dissenters, as St. Paul did with those judaizing, hybrid Christians. South, Sermon v. 518.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [ἕβρις, Gr.; hybrida, Lat.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDRA'TIDES. n. s. [from ὕδρα, Gr.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropsical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lympheducts.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wisean.

HY'DRA. n. s. [hydra, Lat.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin.

Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

HY'DRAGOGUES. n. s. [ὕδρα and ἄγω, Gr.; hydragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages.

HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydraulicks.]
HYDRAULICK. adj. Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulical engines.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels.

HYDRAULICKS.† n. s. [ὕδρα water, and ἄωλος, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

Hydraulics has for its object the motion of fluids.

HYDROCELE. n. s. [ὕδρον κελή, Gr.; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture.

HYDROCEPHALUS. n. s. [ὕδρον and κεφαλή, Fr.] A dropsy in the head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain.

HY'DROGEN.* n. s. [ὕδρα, water, and γεννάω, to generate.] One of the principles of water; in chymical language, as it is found in the form of gas, and then called inflammable air.

HYDRO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ὕδρα and γραφω; hydrographie, Fr.] One who draws maps of the sea.

It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographer.

HYDROGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from hydrography.] Applied to maps or charts, which represent the sea-coast, rocks, islands, shoals, shallows, and the like.

Christopher Columbus, the first great discoverer of America, was a man that earned his living by making and selling hydrographical maps.

HYDRO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [ὕδρα and γραφω; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

To further the noble studie of navigation and hydrographie.

Norman, New Attractive, &c. (1592.) Dedic.
For the reception of which waters he had prepared a channel; how deep, or how great a part of the earth is filled with them, I suppose is beyond this man's skill in philosophy or hydrography to determine.

Bp. Croft, Animado. on Burnet's Theory, p. 84.

HYDRO'LOGY.* n. s. [ὕδρα and λόγος; Fr. hydrologie.] Description of the nature and properties of water in general.

HY'DROMANCY. n. s. [ὕδρα and μανία; hydromantie, Fr.] Prediction by water. Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.

HY'DROMEL. n. s. [ὕδρα and μέλι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were pisans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium.

HYDRO'METER.† n. s. [ὕδρα and μέτρον, Gr.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity, gravity or density, velocity or other properties, of water.

HYDRO'METRY. n. s. [ὕδρα and μέτρον, Gr.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHO'BIA. n. s. [ὕδραφοβία, Gr.; hydrophobie, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia or dread of water is the most remarkable.

HY'DROPHOBY.* n. s. [Fr. hydrophobie.] Dread of water.

A letter from Dr. Lister to Mr. Aston, dated at York, March 26. 1683, was produced, containing an account of an hydrophoby in a man bitten by a mad dog.

HYDRO'PICAL. adj. [ὕδρονικος, Gr.; hydro-Hydro'pick. adj. pique, Fr. from hydro, Lat.]

1. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and *hydro*pical water.

The world's whole sap is suuk:
The general balm th' *hydro*pick earth hath drunk.

Hydrotical swellings if they be pure, are pelucid.

Hydrotick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsies, the water of the hydroticks.

2. Resembling dropsy.

Some men's hydrotick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank.

Every lust is a kind of hydrotick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst.

HY'DROPSY.* n. s. [hydrops, Lat.; ὕδρα, Gr.; hydropsie, Fr.] Personified by Thomson for the dropsy.

Soft-swollen and pale, here lay the Hydropsy, Unwieldy man, with belly monstrous round.

HYDROSTA'TICAL. adj. [ὕδρα and στατική, Gr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: as for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically,—doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

HYDROSTA'TICKS.† n. s. [ὕδρα and στατική, Gr.; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

His [Boyle's] incomparable treatises of the air and hydrostatics.

The lofty column of water issuing out of the trumpet of Fame, exceeded all our conceptions of the power of hydrostatics.

HYDRO'TICK. n. s. [ὕδρα, Greek; hydro-tique, Fr.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile.

HY'DRUS.* n. s. [from ὕδρα, Gr. water.]

1. A water-snake.

Cerastes horn'd hydrus, and elops drear.

2. In astronomy, the water-serpent; a southern constellation.

HY'EMAL.* adj. [Lat. hyemalis.] Belonging to winter: as, the hyemal solstice.

Besides vernal, estival, and autumnal made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands.

Astronomers have divided the whole face of heaven into four colures; the vernal, estival, autumnal, hyemal.

To HY'EMATE. v. n. [Lat. hyemo.] To winter at a place.

HYEMA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. hyematio.] Shelter from the cold of winter.

Where we set them [exotic plants] in for hyemation.

HY'EN.† n. s. [hyene, Fr.; hyæna, Lat.; HY'ENA. n. s. ἕνα, Gr. Supposed to be from the Gr. ἕς, a swine; because the back of this animal is bristly like that of the swine.] An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find;

The hyena shews it, of a double kind:

Varying the sexes in alternate years,

In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden, Fob.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, it thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

HYGROMETER. n. s. [ὑγρὸς and μέτρον, Gr.; hygrometre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

Arbutnot on Air.

HYGROSCOPE. n. s. [ὑγρὸς and σκοπέω, Gr.; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes.

Arbutnot.

HYGROSCOPICK.* adj. [from hygroscope.] Having affinity to water.

Hygrosopic substances have their humidity always proportionable to the places they are in.

Adams.

HYLARCHICAL.† adj. [ἑλῆ and ἀρχή, Gr.] Presiding over matter.

By this hylarchical principle, or plastic nature, so many of the vital motions of the body may be kept in play. Hallywell, Melamprom. (1681.) p. 70.

HYLOZOICK.* n. s. [Gr. ἑλῆ, matter, and ζῶν, life.] One of a sect of ancient atheists that held all matter to be animated and to have perception.

When they (Spinoza and his followers) speak of the intelligence and knowledge of God, they mean to attribute these powers to him in no other sense, than the ancient hylozoicks attributed them to all matter; that is, that a stone, when it falls, has a sensation and consciousness; but that that consciousness is no cause at all, or power, of acting. Which kind of intelligence, in any tolerable propriety of speech, is no intelligence at all. And consequently the arguments, that proved the Supreme Cause to be properly an intelligent and active Being, do also undeniably prove that he is likewise indued with liberty and choice; which alone is the power of acting.

Clarke on the Attributes, § 9.

HYM.† n. s. A species of dog; unless it is by mistake for lym, Dr. Johnson says; which it is, in the passage from Shakespeare's Lear which he cites. See LYM.

HYMEN.† n. s. [ὑμην, Gr.]

1. The god of marriage.

He wore a garland of roses and myrtles on his head, and on his shoulders a robe like an imperial mantle, white and unspotted all over, excepting only that, where it was clasped at his breast, there were two golden turtle-doves that buttoned it by their bills, which were wrought in rubies. He was called by the name of Hymen.

Tatler, No. 120.

Hymen marched immediately after Love; and, seconding the good inclinations which he had inspired, joined the hands of both armies.

Addison, Guardian, No. 152.

2. The virginal membrane.

3. In botany, a fine delicate skin in which flowers are enclosed, while in the bud; spoken particularly of roses.

HYMENE'AL. n. s. [ὑμέναιος, Gr.] A

HYMENE'AN. n. s. marriage song.

And heavenly choirs the hymenean sung.

Milton, P. L.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.

HYMENE'AL. adj. Pertaining to mar-

HYMENE'AN. n. s. riage.

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice

A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope, Odyssey.

HYMN. n. s. [hymne, Fr.; ὕμνος, Gr.]

An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,

So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I eke should frame. Spenser.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse.

Shakespeare.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made

An overture for the wars. Shakespeare, Coriol.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Bacon.

Farewel, you happy shades,

Where angels first should practise hymns, and string

Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing. Dryden.

TO HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνέω, Gr.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose easier business were to serve their Lord

High up in heaven, with songs to hymn his throne.

Milton, P. L.

TO HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning

prais'd

God and his works. Milton, P. L.

He had not left alive this patient saint,

This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence

To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,

And hymn it in the quire. Dryden, Span. Friar.

HYMNICK.† adj. [ὕμνος, Gr.] Relating to hymns.

Where she (faire Ladie) tuning her chaste layes

Of England's Empress to her hymnick string.

Mir. for Mag. p. 773.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick

notes

In birds, heaven's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

HYMNO'LOGY.* n. s. [ὕμνος and λόγος, Gr. hymnologie, French.] A collection of hymns.

That hymnologie which the primitive church used at the offering of bread and wine for the eucharist.

Mede, Dia. p. 56.

TO HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypocondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hyped since I saw you.

Spectator.

HYPA'LLAGE. n. s. [ὑπαλλάγη, Gr.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HY'PER.* [Gr. ὑπερ, above, beyond.] A word often found in composition, in our language, usually signifying excess, or something beyond the meaning of the simple word to which it is joined.

HY'PER. n. s. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,

And hypers upon them again. Prior.

HYPERA'SPIST.* n. s. [Lat. hyperaspistes, from the Gr. ὑπερασπιστής, to protect with a shield.] A defender.

I appeal to any indifferent reader, whether C. M. be not by his hyperaspist forsaken in the plain field. Chillingworth, Works, (ed. 1704,) p. 26.

The hyperaspists of the ancients bestrode their fellows fallen in battle, and covered them with their shields. Warburton, Note on Macbeth.

HYPERBATON.* n. s. [Latin; from the Gr. ὑπερβαίνω, to go beyond.] A figure in writing, when the words are transposed from the plain grammatical order.

If your meaning be with a violent hyperbaton to transpose the text. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

The words are at times so transposed, as to create an hyperbaton.

Durell, Critical Remarks on Job, Pref.

HYPERBOLA. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr.; ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

Bentley.

HY'PERBOLE. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή, Gr.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakespeare.

Terms unsquar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,

Would seem hyperboles. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,

Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, these summer flies,

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Shakespeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanville.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,

Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd!

Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,

They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.

Glanville.

The common people understand railery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYPERBO'LICAL.† adj. [hyperbolique, Fr.; HYPERBO'LICK. from hyperbola.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolic lines.

Grew, Museum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure.
Ray on the Creation.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

An hyperbolic liar, a flatterer, a parasite.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.
Look upon vices and vicious objects with hyperbolical eyes, and rather enlarge their dimensions, that their unseen deformities may not escape thy sense.

There are always some fools that can commend nothing but with hyperbolick expressions.

King Charles, Lett. to Henderson, p. 56.
It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolic, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.
HYPERBOLICALY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.
Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBOLIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBOLIST.* n. s. [from hyperbole.] One who hyperbolizes.

I cease to think the Psalmist an hyperbolist for comparing the transcendent sweetness of God's Word to that inferior one of honey, which is like it in nothing more, than in that of both their suavities experience gives much advantageous notions than descriptions can.

Boyle on the Style of Hol. Script. p. 253.

TO HYPERBOLIZE.* v. n. [from hyperbole.] To speak or write with exaggeration or extenuation.

You have heard—how some of the ancientest fathers do speak, and how they hyperbolize sometimes, in some points, in their popular sermons.

Mountain, App. to Cass. (1625), p. 260.

The Spanish traveller was so habituated to hyperbolize.
Howell, Instruct. for Trav. p. 178.

Which if but a rhetorical flourish, doth yet hyperbolize into blasphemy.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 244.

TO HYPERBOLIZE.* v. a. To exaggerate or extenuate.

Vain people, hyperbolizing his fact,—he grew by their flattery into that madness of conceit.
Fotherly, Atheom: (1622), p. 203.

Come, Man,

Hyperbolized nothing! I know thy span.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 96.

HYPERBOREAN.† n. s. [hyperboréen, Fr.; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

The body moulded by the climate endures
The Equator heats and Hyperborean frost.

Armstrong.

The Hyperborean ice he wander'd o'er,
And solitary roam'd round Tanais's shore.

J. Warton's Virgil.

HYPERCATALECTICK.* adj. [ὑπερ, and catalectick.] Exceeding the measure; applied to verses having a syllable or two too many at the end.

HYPERCRITICK. n. s. [hypercritique, Fr.; ὑπερ and κριτικός.] A critical exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.
Dryden.

HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

Swift.

HYPERDULIA.* n. s. [ὑπερ and dulia.]

HYPERDULY. } A superiour kind of service, among the Romanists, to the Virgin Mary. See DULIA.

From whom our Romanists did first learn their hyperdulia, or transcendent kind of service, where they worship the Virgin Mary.

Alph. Usher, Answ. to the Jes. Malone, p. 356.
From all Romish dulia, and hyperdulia, Good Lord deliver us. Ibid. p. 369.

Call you this devotion, as you please, whether duly or hyperduly.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 352.

HYPERICON.* n. s. [Latin.] In botany, St. John's wort.

Hypericon, called "fuga dæmonum," reckoned among sacred magical plants, on account of the Druids used thereon. Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacr. p. 16.

HYPERMETER. n. s. [ὑπερ and μέτρον.]

Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

Addison.

HYPERPHYSICAL.* adj. [ὑπερ and physical.] Supernatural.

These are hyperphysical optics, and drawn from the heavens.

Aubrey, Miscell. p. 147.

HYPERSCAROSIS. n. s. [ὑπερσκαρσις, ὑπερ and σκαρσις.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hyperscarosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

Wiseman.

HYPHEN.† n. s. [ὑφην, Gr.] A note of conjunction; as vir-tue, ever-living.

What a sight it is to see writers committed together by the ears for ceremonies, syllables, points, colons, commas, hyphens, and the like.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

HYPNOTICK.† n. s. [ὑπνος, Gr.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

I need no better hypnotick to make me sleep.

Brown, Rel. Med.

He writes, as an hypnotick for the spleen.

Young, Ep. to Pope, I.

HYPOCHONDRES.† n. s. [hypochondre, Fr. ὑποχόνδριον, Gr.] This word at first was hypochondry, with the regular plural hypochondries. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this. See HYPOCHONDRY. The two regions lying on each side the cartilago niformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen.

Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenteric arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

HYPOCAUST.* n. s. [ὑποκαυστον, hypocauste, Fr.] A subterraneous place, in which was a furnace that served to heat the baths of the Greeks and Romans; and in modern times applied to the place which keeps warm a stove or hot-house.

The apartments on the east side—were probably warned by the hypocaust.

Lysons, Antiq. at Woodchester, (1797.)

HYPOCHONDRIA.* n. s. [from hypochondres.] Melancholy. Personified by Thomson. The proper substantive is hypochondriacism; though hypochondriasm has been used, but less properly. See HYPOCHONDRIACAL.

Moping here did Hypochondria sit,
Mother of spleen, in robes of various dye,
Who vexed was full oft with ugly fit,
And some her frantic deem'd, and some her deem'd a wit.

Thomson, Castle of Indol.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL.† adj. [hypochondriac, Fr. from hypochondria.]

1. Of or belonging to the hypochondres; also melancholical. See the next sense.

Bullockar.

2. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

A strictness of breath, which I should be glad to know whether you observe in other hypochondriacal patients.

Wolton, Rem. p. 366.

3. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such is the hypochondriac, melancholic complexion of us islanders, that we seem made of butter, every accident makes such a deep impression upon us.

Ep. Berkeley, Lett. (1746.) Life, &c. p. 182.

HYPOCHONDRIACK.* n. s. One who is melancholy, or disordered in imagination.

How the humours of the body arrive at an ability thus to impregnate the mind with conceits wild and monstrous beyond the varieties of Africa, is an enquiry not pertinent here; but to question that so they can, is to speak ourselves strangers to all the stories of hypochondriacks [which] books and discourses abound withal.

Spencer on Vulg. Prophecies, (1665,) p. 98.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

HYPOCHONDRIACISM.* n. s. [from hypochondriack.] Melancholy; disordered imagination.

In hypochondriacism the insanity not being formed, there is for the most part a capacity for action.

Johnstone on Madness, p. 25.

HYPOCHONDRIASIS.* n. s. Hypochondriack affection or passion.

Mental affections produce hypochondriasis, by creating a disorder in the stomach and intestines, and in the nervous system.

Chrichton on Mental Derangement, p. 200.

HYPOCHONDRY.* n. s. [See HYPOCHONDRES.] One of the two regions called the hypochondres. This word has been overlooked, by our lexicographers, as a noun with the singular number.

If from the liver, there is usually a pain in the right hypochondry; if from the spleen, hardness and grief in the left hypochondry.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 200.

Envy swells the hypochondries, which, by drinking up the nourishment of the neighbouring parts, makes the whole body lean and meager.

Scott, Christian Life, F. iii. ch. 3.

HYPOCIST.* n. s. [ὑποκίστη, Gr.; hypociste, Fr.]

Hypocist is an insipissated juice, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe; the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPOCRAS.* See HIPPOCRAS.

HYPOCRISY.† n. s. [hypocrisie, Fr. ὑπόκρισις, Gr. from ὑποκρίνομαι, to feign.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies. 1 Pet. ii. 1.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown.

Dryden, Fab.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. s. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκρίτης, Gr.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakespeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Eccles. xxxiii. 3.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign.

Dryden.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue; but may hypocrites,
Who slyly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unward'd drink on,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philips.

Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]
HYPOCRITICK. } Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by this hypocritical down-cast look. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their proselytes and their religion. Gos. of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr.; ὑπο και γαστήρ, Gr.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman.

HYPOGE'UM. n. s. [ὑπο και γῆ, Gr.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS.† n. s. [hypostase, French; ὑπόστασις, Gr.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

3. In medicine, sediment of urine.

Here's an hypostasis argues a very bad stomach. Nabbes, Microcosmus.

HYPOSTATICAL.† adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatistical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

Beside that grounded upon the hypostatistical union; beside that glorious condition upon his resurrection; there was yet another and that more proper ascension. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

HYPOSTATICALLY.* adv. [from hypostatistical.] Personally.

That they should see all things and transactions, hear all prayers and orations, "in speculo divinitatis," is alike incredible; a thing which the humanity of Christ himself, though hypostatistically united to the divinity, did not pretend to. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

HYPO'TENUSE. n. s. [hypotenuse, French, ὑποτένυσα, Gr.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

To HYPO'THECATE.* v. a. [Lat. hypotheca, a pledge.] To pawn; to give in pledge.

Whether they, to whom this new pledge is hypothecated, have redeemed their own; — I leave it to those, who recollect that memorable debate, to determine. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

HYPO'THESIS.† n. s. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις, Gr.] Our word was pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, new and uncouth. A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together;

sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South.

What imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise;
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHETICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.
HYPOTHETICK. } from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically.

Broome, Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

HYRSE.* n. s. [German, hirse.] In botany, millet. Coles.

HYRST. } Are all from the Sax. hýrre, ..
HURST. } wood or grove. } Gibson.
HERST. }*

HY'SSOP. n. s. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyss is commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Mills.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, Fr.
HYSTERICK. } ὑστερικὸς, Gr.]

1. Troubled with fits: disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HYSTERICKS. n. s. [ὑστερικὸς, Gr.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

HY'STERON-PRO'TERON.* n. s. [ὑστερον, πρότερον, Gr.] A rhetorical figure: when that is last said, which was first done. Peachment.

A Greek term, sometimes used in derision of that which is spoken or done preposterously, or quite contrary. We call it in English, The cart before the horse. Bullockar.

HYTHE.* n. s. A port. See HITHE.

I.

I

J A C

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as, jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

I, pronoun personal, [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch; ig, eg, Icel. ego, Latin, ēya, Gr.]

I, gen. &c. me; plural we, gen. &c. us. Sax. ic. dat. &c. me; plural we, dat. &c. u. Goth. ik gen. meina; plural weis, dat. &c. uns, unsis.

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.
I do not like these several councils, I.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.
There is none greater in this house than I.

Gen. xxix. 9.
Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid.

St. Matt. xiv. 27.
What shall I do to be for ever known,

And make the age to come my own?
I shall like beasts or common people die,

Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.
Hence, and make room for me! Cowley.

When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
To my longing friends return again. Dryden, Æn.

Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray.

Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Richardson, Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakspeare written for ay, or yes.—Dr. Johnson.—It was usual in the time of Shakspeare, and later, to write the affirmative article ay in the form of I, and was not merely poetical custom.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shaks.
Did your letters pierce the queen?

—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down.

Shakspeare.

I, now the spheres are in their tunes again.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

There cannot be imagined an example more exactly suiting, more closely applicable to his intent, which was not to discredit and dishearten his followers, by comparing, I, and preferring the cunning of an ordinary fellow.

Chillingworth, Works, (ed. 1704,) p. 381.

4. I, prefixed to a word, is common in our old language, as well as y; as ibrought, ibuilt, ybuilt, yblessed; and is the Saxon prepositive particle ge. It is merely a redundancy.

To JABBER.† v. n. [gabbaren, Dutch. See To GAB, and To GABBLE. Jabber is old in our language; though Dr. Johnson maintains it only by the modern authority of Swift.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

Censynge, Latyne jabberinge, and wavylynge, accordinge to the office of saynt Antonynes personage. Bale, Yet a Comrae, &c. (1543,) fol. 43. b.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties. Swift.

JA'BBER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Garrulity; prating. Bishop Fleetwood somewhere uses the word in his works; and it is still a colloquial term.

JA'BBERER. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cunt the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'BBERMENT.* n. s. [from jabber.] Idle talk; prate.

We are come to his farewell, which is to be a concluding taste of his jabberment in the law.

Milton, Colasterian.

JA'BBERNOWL.* See JOBBERNOWL.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacens posture. Wotton, Architect.

JACI'NTH. n. s. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK.† n. s. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James. Dr. Johnson.—Jak, Jaky, old French. Kelham.—I know not how it has happened, that, in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence zany; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose Jack ass has the same etymology. Tyrwhitt.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or pautly fellows.

I know some pepper-nosed dame
Will term me fool and saucy Jack,
That dare their credit so defame,
And lay such slanders on their back.

H. Gifford, Posie of Gilliflowers, (1580.)

Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

You will perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus. Shaks. Coriol.

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting,
And I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

A company of scoffers and proud Jacks are commonly conversant and attendant in such places.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 291.

I met some Jack lords going into my grove, but I think I have nettled them!

Bp. Ward, Pope's Life of Ward, p. 47.

Such, especially if they are broken gamesters, I still say are no better than Jack gentlemen.

Bp. Parker, Rehears. Transpr. p. 480.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters' boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts, Logic.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindle; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm.

Mozon, Mech. Ex.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wiseman, Surgery.
Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks.

Pope.

4. A young pike. [perhaps from the Lat. jaculum. Skinner.]

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. A coat of mail. [old French jaque, or jake; Germ. jacke; Dutch, jack; Ital. giacco.] A coat of mail; a kind of military coat put over the coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather. See BLACK-JACK.

Small jacks we have in many ale-houses of the city and suburbs, tipt with silver.

Heywood, Drunkard opened, &c. (1635,) p. 45.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borachio, sup From a foul jack, or greasy maple-cup.

Dryden, Pers.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poisoned, and thrown upon a plain bowling green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instruments called a virginal, a harpsichord, a spinet.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

Those jacks that nimble leap

To kiss the tender inward of thy hand.

Shakspeare, Sonn.

Your teeth did dance like virginal jacks.

B. Jonson, Fox.

It plays on the harpsicon the while, whose jacks are the pebble-stones, checking the little waves as strings.

Parth. Sacra, p. 210.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbutnot on Coins.

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsworth.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship.

Ainsworth.

Nothing was to be seen aloft but ensigns, jacks, streamers, and the heads of sailors.

Drummond, Trav. p. 71.

12. In Yorkshire, half a pint. Grose. A quarter of a pint. Pegge.

13. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and sound;

An inverse burse, an exchange under ground.

Cleveland.

14. Used by Shakspeare for Jack with the lantern.

Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

- JACK Boots. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commodore and a night-rail.

Spectator.

- JACK by the Hedge. n. s. Erysimum.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other salads are, and much used in broth.

Mortimer.

- JACK of the Clock-house. n. s. The little man that strikes the quarters in a clock, jacquet. Cotgrave. This kind of automaton may yet be seen in some of our market-towns, as well as at St. Dunstan's church in London.

My time

Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Is this your Jack o' the clock-house? —

Will you strike, sir? Beaumont and Fl. Coxcomb.

- JACK Pudding. n. s. [jack and pudding.]

A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack-pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover.

L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean potage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding in his party-colour'd jacket,

Tosses the glove, and jokes at every packet. Gay.

- JACK Sauce. n. s. An impudent fellow; a saucy Jack. Huloot and Minsheu.

His reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack sauce.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

- JACK with a Lantern. † n. s. An ignis fatuus. See IGNIS FATUUS. Written also Jack-a-lantern.

Plenty of inflammable sulphureous matter in the air, such as ignis fatui, or jack-a-lanterns, and the meteors which are called falling stars.

Steph. Hales on Earthquakes, (1750,) p. 10.

He has played Jack with a lantern, he has led us about like an ignis fatuus, by which travellers are decoyed into the mire.

Johnson, Note on Shakspeare's Tempest.

- JACKADANDY. n. s. [jack and dandy.]

A little impertinent fellow. See DANDIPRAT. In this sense it is still a northern word. See Craven Dialect, where the Teut. danten, to play the fool, is cited for the etymology. The word is generally used in contempt.

- JACKALENT. † n. s. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow. Dr. Johnson. — This is not so. A Jack-o-Lent was a puppet formerly thrown at in Lent, like shrove-cocks. Neither is Dr. Johnson's definition of a "simple, sheepish fellow" applicable to the solitary example which he cites from Shakspeare. It is there applied to Falstaff's page, little Robin, an intelligent lad, in a joking manner.]

A sort of puppet.

You little jackalents, have you been true to us? —

— Ay, I'll be sworn.

Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Wind.

On an Ash-Wednesday,

Where thou didst stand six weeks the Jack o' Lent,
For boys to hurl three throws a penny at thee.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Push-pin is too high for him; he is fit for no other employment than to catch shadows and jackalents; for though they are meer nothings, yet to children they appear as it were something.

Bp. Parker, Rehears. Transpr. p. 204.

- JACKA'L. † n. s. [chacal, Fr. from the Persian schakal, which is also written shegal, and is from the Hebrew shual. See Pocock's Comm. on Malachi, ch. i. ver. 3.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chase-guns, through our sterns they send:

Close by their freshires, like jackals appear,

Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts.

Arbutnot and Pope.

- JACKANAPES. † n. s. [jack and ape. Dr. Johnson. — The second sense, applied to] a coxcomb or impertinent person, is very old in our language. Skelton says,

"He grins and he gapes,
"As it were Jack Napes."

Poems, p. 160.

And Bale, "He played Jack-a-napes, swearing by his tenne bones." Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, 1543, fol. 92. And so Marston, "Down, Jack-an-apes, from thy feign'd royalty." Scourge of Villany, B. 3. Sat. 9. (1599.) This naturally refers us to the tricks of the ape; and the corruption of Jack Napes is easily accounted for by the various writing or pronunciation of that word. Ape is a word of great antiquity.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

I believe he hath robb'd a jackanapes of his gesture; mark but his countenance; see how he mops, and how he mowes, and how he strains his looks!

Riche, Faults, &c. (1606,) p. 7.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?

— That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakspeare.

People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him.

Arbutnot.

- JACKASS. n. See the etymology of JACK, and Dr. Johnson's ninth definition of that word.

- JACKDAW. † n. s. [from jack and daw, Dr. Johnson says; calling it "a cock daw."

— It is the Teut. gacke, the "menedula" or daw, with the addition of our own word.] A species of the crow.

Not all unlyke unto Esope's chough, whom we commonly call Jackedawe.

Bale, Yete a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 87.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man.

Watts.

- JACKET. n. s. [jaquette, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

And hens and dogs and hogs are feeding by;

And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Pope.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her.

L'Estrange.

- JACKETED. adj. [from jacket.] Wearing a jacket.

Huloot.

- JACOB'S Ladder. n. s. Polemonium; the same with Greek valerian.

- JACOB'S Staff. † n. s.

1. A pilgrim's staff. [from St. Jacob, or James, the pretended patron of pilgrims.]

2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

Reach then a soaring quill that I may write,

As with a Jacob's staff to take her height.

Cleveland, Hec. to his Mistress, p. 11.

Why on a sign no painter draws

The full-moon ever, but the half,

Resolve that with your Jacob's staff.

Hudibras, ii. iii.

- JACOBIN, or JACOBINE. n. s. [Fr. Jacobin, from the Lat. Jacobus, as having some pretended reference or allusion to St. James.]

1. A friar of the order of St. Dominick; a gray or white friar.

Now I am Robert, now Robin,
Now freer Minor, now Jacobin.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6338.
This king went in danger of his life, a long while sought by a capuchin;—who at length was taken and executed, together with another Jacobine for the same crime.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. One of an execrable faction in the late French democratical revolution, distinguished by their hatred of religion, monarchy, and social order; so called from their meeting at the church of St. Jacobus, or a monastery of the Jacobin friars; one who approves or maintains the principles of such.

With the Jacobins of France, vague intercourse is without reproach; marriage is reduced to the vilest concubinage; children are encouraged to cut the throats of their parents; mothers are taught that tenderness is no part of their character.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

We are not to conclude that all, who are not Jacobins, are conscientiously attached to the established church.

Bp. Horsley, Charge.

- JACOBIAN.* } adj. Of the principles of JACOBINICAL.* } modern Jacobins.

They knew from the beginning that the Jacobin party was not confined to that country.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

- JACOBINISM.* n. s. The principles of a modern Jacobine.

When to these establishments of regicide, of Jacobinism, and of atheism, you add the correspondent system of manners, no doubt can be left on the mind of a thinking man, concerning their determined hostility to the human race.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

May the more recent spirit of Jacobinism have a still quicker termination.

Mason, Note to Isis.

- TO JACOBINIZE.* v. a. To infect with Jacobinism.

France was not then Jacobinized.

Burke.

- JACOBIEN. n. s. A pigeon with a high tuft.

Ainsworth.

- JACOBITE.* n. s.

1. One of a sect of hereticks, who were anciently a branch of the Eutychians, and are still subsisting in the Levant.

The Jacobites took their denomination from one Jacob, a Syrian, who began to disseminate his doctrines in the East about the close of the sixth century. His sect are sometimes distinguished by the name of Monophysites, the progeny of the Eutychians, who asserted the single nature of Christ, in opposition to the orthodox, who maintained that his nature was twofold, human, and divine.

Professor White's Serm. Notes, p. ix.

2. One attached to the cause of king James the second after his abdication, and to his line. [from Jacobus, Lat. for James.]

He is writing an epigram to a young virgin, who knits very well: It is a thousand pities he is a Jacobite; but his epigram is by way of advice to this damsel, to knit all the actions of the Pretender, and the duke of Burgundy's last campaign, in the clock of a stocking.

Tatler, No. 3.

- JACOBITE.* adj. [from the noun.] Of the principles of Jacobites.

The whole story party was become avowedly Jacobite.

Ld. Bolingbroke.

- JACOBITISM.* n. s. The principles of a Jacobite.

The spirit of Jacobitism, which had obtained in both our universities before the year 1745, was far from being quite extinguished in 1748.

Mason, Note to Isis.

- JACOBUS.* n. s. [Lat.] A gold coin, worth twenty-five shillings, so called from king James the first of England, in whose reign it was struck.

The women have taken a fancy to prefer guineas and Jacobuses.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 273.

- JACKSMITH.* n. s. [jack and smith.] A maker of the engine called a jack.

Tompson, the celebrated watchmaker, was originally a Jacksmith.

Malone, Note on Dryden, i. ii. 49.

- JACTANCY.* n. s. [old French jactance, jactance, Lacombe; jactantia, Lat.] Boasting.

Cockeram.

- JACTATION.* n. s. [jactito, Lat.]

1. Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials.

Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

- TO JACULATE.* v. a. [Latin, jaculo.] To dart.

Cockeram.

- JACULATION.* n. s. [jaculatio, Lat.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

It was well and strongly strung with 36 barrels of gunpowder, great and small, for the more violent jaculation, vibration, and speed of the arrows.

Dean King, Serm. 5. Nov. (1608), p. 20.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hur'd to and fro with jaculation dire.

Milton, P. L.

- JACULATORY.* adj. [from To jaculate; Fr. jaculatoire.]

1. Throwing out.

Bullockar.

2. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences; ejaculatory.

Jaculatory prayers are the nearest dispositions to contemplation.

Sp. Cong. Maxims of Myst. Divin. (1651), p. 81.

- JADE.* n. s. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur. Dr. Johnson.—Hickes and Serenius observe that the Icel. jalkr, or jaelkr, is an aged horse; from jad, loss of teeth.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag; and sometimes a vicious horse.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!

I am as dull as winter-starved sheep,

Tir'd as a jade in overlaid cart.

Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor

jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips.

Shakespeare.

If we kick when your honour spur us,

We are knaves and jades!

Beaumont and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

So have I seen with armed heel,

A wight bestide a commonweal,

While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,

The less the sullen jade had stir'd.

Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him.

L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,

As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace.

Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags:—
The squire, arriving, fiercely in his arms
Snatch'd first the one, and then the other jade.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower

Of youth, that you have, pass you?

Chapman.

But she, the cunning'st jade alive,

Says 'tis the ready way to thrive.

Stepney.

Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue.

Southern, Innocent Adultery.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,

She shines the first of batter'd jades,

And flutters in her pride.

Swift.

3. A young woman; in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes.

Addison.

- JADE. n. s. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres.

Hill.

- TO JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,

The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia

We've jaded out o' the field.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far.

Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degenerate strain.

Dryden, Juv.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again.

Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation.

Watts, Logick.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,

To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,

Farewell nobility.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

- TO JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution.

South.

- JADERY.* n. s. [from jade.] Jadish tricks.

Seeks all foul means

Of boisterous and rought jadery, to aissent

His lord that kept it bravely.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

JADISH.† adj. [from jade.]

1. Vicious; bad, as an horse.

If an ass did kick, &c. some will for such jadish tricks give the ass his due burden of bastinado. Florio's First Fruits, &c. (1598), Pref. That hors'd us on their backs, to show us A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras. When once the people get the jadish trick Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe.

Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest.

L'Estrange.

To JAG.† v. a. [gagau, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

To advance your flesh, you cut and jagge your clothes.

Old Morality of Lusty Juventus, (temp. Edw. VI.)

To what end doe we jagge and gash the garments, that are sewed together to cover our bodies? Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon, p. 239.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon, Nat. Hist. The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An elder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A small parcel of any thing; a small load of hay or corn. In Norfolk and Suffolk it is called a bargain. See Grose, and Wilbraham's and Moore's Glossaries.

The latter of these two letters is come abroad; whereof, because it is in many hands, some jags will suffice to be recited.

Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693), p. 136.

JAGGEDNESS. n. s. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated: unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham on Drawing.

JAGGY. adj. [from jag.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold; His shoulders and his sides were scall'd with gold; Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes; His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid those angles, infinitely strain'd, They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson.

JAIL.† n. s. [geol. Welsh: geole, or rather gaiole, Fr. geol, Su. Goth. But see GAOL.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. It is written either gaol or jail, but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him.

Shakspeare.

A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew 'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain, Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JAILBIRD. n. s. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailors. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd; There let him reign, the jailer of the wind; With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call, And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden, Æn.

Palamon, the prisoner knight, Restless for woe, arose before the light; And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology.

Dr. Johnson. — From the Lat. cacare; Sax. cac-hure, a privy. Minsheu, Skinner, and Lye. — Or, perhaps, from the Lat. jacio, jactus, thrown into, cast into.] A privy; a little house accommodated with a place to receive the excrements; "a common draught." Huloet. Dr. Johnson's examples of this word exhibit it as a noun having the plural number only; but it was used in the singular, having the same form.

Such therefore is this house; — and not this jakes, built upon men's traditions with mouldy and rotten wood.

Harnar, Tyr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587), p. 200. I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him.

From thence, as from an infernal jakes, do issue the most infamous vices, and execrable actions that can be committed by men.

Heywyt, Sermon. (1658), p. 141. Their sordid aversion rakes In excrements, and hires the very jakes.

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. s. [jalap, Fr. jalapium, low Lat.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy, and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Ma-deiras. It is an excellent purgative where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill, Mat. Med.

JAM.† n. s. [I know not whence derived.]

1. A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

2. A sort of frock for children.

The long muslin dress, usually worn in India, both by Hindoos and Mahomedans, is called jammah; whence the dress well known in England, and worn by children, is usually called a jum. Hodges, Travels, p. 3.

3. A thick bed of stone, which hinders the work of the lead-miners, when they are pursuing the veins of ore. The language of the lead-miners in Mendip.

Chambers.

To JAM.* v. a. [I know not the etymology.]

1. To squeeze closely; to enclose any object between two bodies, so as to render it immovable.

2. To render firm by treading, as cattle do the land they are foddered on. North. Grose.

JAMA'ICA Pepper.* See ALLSPICE.

JAMB. n. s. [jambe, Fr. a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the foreside of the chimney *jamb*s.

Mozon, Mech. Esser.

JAMBEUX.* n. s. [Fr. jambes. See GIAMBEUX.] Armour for the legs.

One for his legs and knees provided well, With jamboux arm'd, and double plates of steel. Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

JAMBE'E.* n. s. A name formerly for a fashionable sort of cane.

Sir Timothy, yours is a true jambée; and esquire Empty's only a plain dragon. — This virtuoso has a parcel of jambées now growing in the East Indies. Tatler, No. 142.

IA'MBICK. n. s. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies, It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies: Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

IA'MBICK.* adj. Composed of iambick feet. Aristotle observes, that the iambick verse in the Greek tongue was the most proper for tragedy; because, at the same time that it lifted up the discourse from prose, it was that which approached nearer to it than any other kind of verse.

Addison, Spect. No. 39.

JANE.* n. s.

1. A coin of Genoa. Skinner. "Dear enough a jane." Chaucer.

I could not give her many a jane. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 58.

2. A kind of fustian; a word still in use. Whether from Genoa, or, as Fuller derives it, from Jan, i. e. Jena, in Saxony, (in his Worthies, under Lancashire,) I am unable to say.

Two yards of jeune fustiane to lyne a dublet for Mr. John, 20d. Talbot Accounts, 1580.

To JANGLE.† v. n. [jangler, old Fr. Skinner, jaengla, Su. Goth.] To altercation; to quarrel; to bicker in words. Now a low word; formerly much used by our old writers; and in the sense of to prate, to babble, which Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed.

1. To prate; to talk idly or maliciously. My son, be thou none of tho To jangle, and tell tales so. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 3. Of sundry doutes thus they jangle and trete. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

Wife is not in the Scriptures called an impediment or necessary evil, as certain poets and beastly men, who hated women, have foolishly jangled. Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon, p. 224.

Whether any have used to commune, jangle, and talk in the church.

Articles of Visitation by Atty. Cranmer.

A vain humour he hath in building, bragging, jingling, spending, gaming.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

A jangling noise of words unknown.

Milton, P. L.

2. To quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles, agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men.

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling.

Raleigh.

To JA'NGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Ere Gothic forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse ere monkish rhymes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes.

Prior.

JA'NGLE.* n. s. [old Fr. jangle.]

1. Prate; babble.

This soporiferous — was ful of jangles, —
And ever enquiring upon every thing.

Chaucer, Fr. Tale.

2. Discordant sound.

The mad jangle of Matilda's lyre.

The Mæviad.

JA'NGLER.† n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. jangleur.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow; a prater.

A tongue cuteth friendship all atwo:

A jangler is to God abhominable.

Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

News-carriers, janglers, and such like idle companions.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

JA'GLING.* n. s. [from jangle.]

1. Babble; mere prate.

The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned; from which some having swerved, have turned aside unto vain jangling, [μᾶλλον ὀφθαλμοῖς, vain discourse], desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

1 Tim. i. 6.

2. Dispute; altercation; quarrel.

So far am I glad it did so sort,

As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Shakespeare.

They lose their respect towards from this jangling of ours.

Guardian, No. 73.

JA'NIOR.* n. s. [Latin.] A door-keeper; a porter.

The janitor of the starry hall drove away slumbers.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

JANIZARY.† n. s. [A Turkish word.]

Janizari apud Turcos significat novum ordinem. Nam Jani est novum, et Zar ordo; ideo autem dictus ordo ille novus, quia illum ultimum Turcæ invenerunt. Alii Janizarios dictos volunt, quasi janitores, quia semper proximi sunt ad Imperatorem, certè proximiores aliis. Critopuli Emendat. et Animadv. in Meursii Gloss. p. 26.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizier, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standard's lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain.

Waller.

Next follow his best footmen, called janizaries, taken young from their christian parents, (parallel to the Roman prætorian soldiers,) being the guard of the grand signior's person.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 233.

JANIZ'ARIAN.* adj. [from janizary.] Of the command or government of janizaries.

I never shall so far injure the janizarian republic of Algiers, as to put it in comparison for every sort of crime, turpitude, and oppression, with the jacobin republic of Paris.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

JA'NNOCK. n. s. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat bread. A northern word.

JA'NSENISM.* n. s. The doctrine of Cornelius Jansen, bishop of Ypres, in Flanders; which made no great noise in the world till after the death of its author in 1638. It related chiefly to grace and freewill. To his work, which was published after his death, he had been induced by the controversy at the beginning of the seventeenth century, between the Jesuits and Dominicans, concerning the nature and necessity of divine grace.

JA'NSENIST.* n. s. One who espouses the opinions of Jansen.

He was a Jansenist; he hated the Jesuits.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1671.

JA'NTY.† adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — But see GENR.]

Such also is the Teut. jent, pretty. Dr. Jamieson has observed, that Bailey gives what seems the proper sense of this word, viz. "romping, wanton;" and he barely notices Dr. Johnson's definition of "showy, fluttering." Append. to his Etym. Dict. But Dr. Johnson is right; and Bailey's sense must be sought elsewhere than in our authors of note. I confirm Dr. Johnson's sense by four examples, to which "romping and wanton" can have no claim.] Showy; fluttering; finical.

Not every one that brings from beyond seas a new gin, or other janty device, is therefore a philosopher.

Hobbes Considered, (1692).

This sort of woman is a janty slattern; she hangs on her clothes, plays her head, and varies her posture.

Spectator.

Such janty scribblers are justly laughed at for their sonnets on Phillis and Chloris, and fantastical descriptions in them.

Tatler, No. 9.

A janty limp is the present beauty.

Tatler, No. 77.

What though they dress so fine and janty?

Warton, Oxf. Neusm. Verses, (1760).

JA'NTINESS. n. s. [from janty.] Airiness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntness of air I was once master of.

Addison, Spect.

JAN'UARY. n. s. [Januarius, Lat.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was, among the Romans, consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence.

Peacham.

JAPAN'. n. s. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush.

Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense.

Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire

Among these generous presents joins his part,

And aids with soot the new japanning art.

Gay, Trivia.

JAPA'NNER. n. s. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;

They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new *japan*ner to their shoes.

Pope, Horace,
To JAPE.* v. n. [Icel. geipa, to utter foolish or light words; to jest: allied to the verb gibe, old Fr. gaber. Lye deduces it from the Armor. goap, irrisio, goapat, irridere; whence, he adds, the Fr. gaber.] To jest. Obsolete.

To japen he began. Chaucer, Prolog. to Sir Thopas.

To JAPE.* v. a.

1. To cheat; to impose upon. [Sax. zeap, cunning, crafty.]

Thus hath he japed thee ful many a yere.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To sport with; to wanton with. In both senses obsolete.

JAPE.* n. s. [Icel. geip.] A jest; a trick. Obsolete.

He had a jape of malice in the dark.

Chaucer, Coke's Prolog.

JA'PER.* n. s. [from jape.] A jester; a buffoon. Obsolete.

After this cometh the sinne of japers, that ben the devils apes.

Chaucer, Pers. Tale.

They ben but jugglers and japers.

F. Ploughman's Creed.

To JAR.† v. n. [from coppe, anger, Sax.; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung.

Dryden.

2. To strike or sound untunably and irregularly.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow.

Gay.

3. To strike or sound regularly; to repeat the same sound or noise.

O, you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I perceive you delight not in music.

— Not a whit, when it jars so.

Shakespeare.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,

And the most skilful archer miss his aim.

Roscommon.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd

Amid a jarring world.

Thomson, Summer.

3. To strike or vibrate regularly; to repeat the same sound or noise.

My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The owl shrieking, the toads croaking, the minutes jarring, and the clock striking twelve.

Kyd, Spanish Trög. (1601).

He hears no waking clocke, nor watch to jarre.

Heywood, Tröja Britann. iv. 107. (1609).

4. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.
Shakspeare.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton, P. L.
Venulus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Rears horrible. Dryden, Æn.

5. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar.

Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can to jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

To JAR.* v. a.

1. To make to jar, or sound untunably.

When once they [bells] jar and check each other, either jangling together, or striking preposterously, how harsh and unplesing is that noise? Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 80.

2. To shake; to agitate.

JAR.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Harsh sound; discord.

Harsh ill-sounding jars
Of clamorous sin, that all our music mars.
Milton, at a Solemn Musick, (MS. reading).

3. A repetition of the noise made by the pendulum of a clock. See the third sense of the verb.

I love thee not a jar o'the clock behind
What lady she her lord. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

4. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar.
O miserable men, that to him subject are!
Spenser, F. Q.
Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are.
Unto this point, we will appease our jar.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Force would be right; or rather right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too.

Shakspeare.

5. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened; that is, on the turn; gyrus, Lat. a turning about; γῑραν, Sax. to turn.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

6. An earthen vessel. [Spanish, jarro; Ital. giarro.]

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

To JA'BBLE.* v. a. To bemire; to daggle; to wet. A northern word. Dr. Johnson says it is jable. See To JAVEL. The Yorkshire Glossary, and the still more northern pronunciation in Cumberland, is jarble.

JARDES. n. s. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time, will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches.

Farrier's Dict.

To JA'RGLE.* v. n. [Su. Goth. jerga.] To emit a shrill or harsh sound.

Oh, Hercules! —
Thy mother could for thee thy cradle set
Her husband's rusty iron corselet;
Whose jargling sound might rock her babe to rest.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

JA'RGON.† n. s. [jargon, Fr. gergon, Ital. Perhaps, as Serenius observes, from the Su. Goth. jerga, "eadem oberrare chorda." Formerly we had the verb in the sense of prate or chatter; and I find no occurrence of the substantive so early as that of the verb in the following lines from Gower's fifth book of his Confessio Amantis:

"Whan he thir tongue refte,
"A littell part thereof he lefte;
"But she withall no worde maie sowne,
"But chitre, and as a byrde jargonwe.
The French have the verb jargonner.]

Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.
Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematics, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bp. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shews
That all his predecessors' rules

Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.
During the usurpation an infusion of enthu-siastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARGONE'LE. n. s. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JA'RRING.* n. s. [from jar.] Quarrel; dispute.

Polygamy occasions perpetual jarrings, and jealousies. Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 113.

JA'RSEY.* See JERSEY.

JA'SEY.* n. s. [corrupted from jarsey, or jersey, which Bailey calls "the finest wool, separated from the rest by combing." A worsted wig; and in some places a colloquial term for any wig.

JA'SHAWK. n. s. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JA'SMINE. n. s. [gelsiminum; jasmín, Fr. It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou like the harmless bee, mayst freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander.

Thomson.

JA'SMINE Persian. n. s. A plant. A species of lilac.

JASP.† { n. s. [jasp, Fr. iaspis, Lat.] JA'SPER. } A hard stone of a bright, beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China.

Hill, Mat. Med.

The floor of jasp and emeraude was light.

Spenser, Vis. of Bellay.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow, and white.

Woodward, Met. Foss.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the Vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLEPTICK. adj. [iatrialeptique, Fr. iatros and leptike, Gr.] That which cures by anointing.

To JA'VÉL, or JA'BLE.† v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties. Dr. Johnson. — To jarble, as I before observed, is our northern word. Nevertheless, jable, in our old language, is found for javel. See the substantive. Of its etymology I am ignorant.

JA'VEL.† n. s. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

What, thou javel, canst not have to do?

Thou and thy company shall not depart,
Till of our distavys ye have take part.

Mystery of Candlemas-Day, (1512).

When as Time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit?

More, Life of Sir Tho. More.

JA'VELIN. n. s. [javeline, Fr.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds.

Milton, P. L.

She shakes her myrtle javelin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind.

Dryden, Æn.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm?

Addison, Cato.

JAUM.* n. s. The language of carpenters, and also of our northern counties, for jamb. See JAMB. It was formerly written jaumb.

To JAUNCE.* v. n. [Fr. jancer, "to jaunt, an old word." Cotgrave.] To bustle about; to jaunt. This is the true reading in the following passage, which Dr. Johnson has converted into jaunting, and affixed as an authority to jaunt.

I was not made a horse,

And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

JA'UNDICE. n. s. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood: and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastriack arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice By being peevish? Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright, Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy, As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. † v. n. [originally jaunce; Fr. jancer, an old word. See To JAUNCE.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

O, my back, my back! Beshrew your heart for sending me about, To catch my death with jaunting up and down. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

I'm weary with the walk, My jaunting days are done. Beaum. and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

JAUNT. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind, After his airy jaunt, though hurried sore, Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton, P. R.

He sends me out on many a jaunt, Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallic and mineral bodies. Woodward.

2. The fellow of a wheel. [Fr. jante.]

JA'NTINES. See JANTINES.

JA'UNTY.* See JANTY.

JAW. † n. s. [joue, a cheek, Fr. whence jowbone, or cheekbone, then jaw. Dr. Johnson.—This word, it must be observed, was formerly written chaw. "The chaw bone. The chawes." Barret's Alv. 1580. The etymon of the verb chaw will therefore, perhaps, be more satisfactory. See To CHAW. Serenius notices the Sax. æagol, mandibula, maxilla; and the Icel. jagol, dens molaris.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives to devour the poor.

Prov. xxx. 14.
The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinale. Walton, Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith, that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable.

Grew, Museum.

More formidable hydra stands within, Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden, Æn.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psal. xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.

A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws, And utmost anguish shakes my labouring frame. Rowe.

3. In low language, gross abuse.

To JAW.* v. a. In low language, to abuse grossly; used also in Scotland, "to assault one with coarse railery." Dr. Jamieson.

JA'WED.* adj. [from jaw.] Denoting the appearance of the jaws.

Jawed liked a jetty. Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

JA'WFALL.* n. s. [jaw and fall.] Depression of the jaw; figuratively, depression of mind or spirits. So CHAP-FALLEN.

We find the Jews—desperately sick of this vertiginous disease; for they had their dukes, or leaders;—and for a time they had an inter-regnum, and no king in Israel, beside divers other horrid jawfalls in government.

Dr. M. Griffith, Fear of God & the King, (1660,) p. 81.

To JAWN.* v. n. [See CHAUN, and To CHAUN.] To open.

Stop his jawning chaps. Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. 3. (1599.)

JA'WY.* adj. [from jaw.] Relating to the jaws.

The dewlaps and the jawy part of the face. Gayton on D. Quixote, p. 42.

JAY. † n. s. [named from his cry. Skinner and Dr. Johnson.—The bird has much the same name in other languages; gay, gæy, old Teut.; gay, geay, Fr.; kaa, Dan. "The jay, that chattering bird, which has found its way into so many languages, is nothing but the jay; and it might easily be proved, that all its various names are derived from this idea." Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 192. Isidore supposes the Latin name of this bird, graculus, to be derived from garulitas, its prating.] A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp-winged sheers, Decked with diverse plumes, like painted jays, Were fixed at his back to cut his airy ways.

Spenser, F. Q.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pumpon—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark, Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakspeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insect's gilded wings? Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings? Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. s. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

I'IS.* n. s. The name of an Egyptian bird, approaching to the stork-kind.

A certain bird called ibis, about the banks of the Nile, first taught the Egyptians the way of administering clysters; for this bird has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intromitted into the anus, to inject salt-water, as with a syringe, into its own bowels, and thereby to exonerate its paunch when too much obstructed.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 232.

ICE. † n. s. [ij, Sax.; eyse, Dutch; is, Swed. allied, as Lye thinks, to the Icel. isiaki, large fragments of ice.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no, Then is the coal of fire upon the ice, Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the first opening by any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat, Achieve the elder, set the younger free For our access, whose hap shall be to have her, Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shakspeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peachment on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wise, At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

To ICE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to make ice.

'Tis chrysal, friend, ic'd in the frozen sea. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eclog. v. 11.

2. To cover with concreted sugar; to cover as with sugar.

Noise, and passion, and hardy confidence, iced over with some sanctimonious pretences, can engage the affections of the vulgar more than ingenuity and real moderation.

Puller, Moder. of the Ch. of Eng. Pref. (1679.)

3. To chill; to freeze.

ICEBUILT.* adj. [ice and build.] Formed of heaps of ice.

Where shaggy forms o'er icebuilt mountains roam. Gray, Prog. of Poesy.

ICEHOUSE. n. s. [ice and house.] A house, in which ice is repositated against the warm months.

ICELANDER.* n. s. A native of Iceland.

The aspirations of the consonants, so frequent in the English, are the leading marks to a Northern derivation; so that an Icelander, hearing this in the mouth of an Englishman, will go no farther than to his own language, and is sure to find either the same word, or the root of it, with very few alterations.

Serenius, Pref. to his Eng. and Sw. Dict.

ICHNE'UMON. † n. s. [ixnévmon, Gr.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

The crocodile—is awed by none more than the ichneumon. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 364.

The ichneumon makes it the whole business of his life to break the eggs of the crocodile.

Addison, Spect. No. 126.

ICHNEUMONFLY' n. s. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphs of insects.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

Young on Idolatrous Corrupt. ii. 275.

ICONOCLASTICK.* adj. [from iconoclast.] Breaking or destroying images.

I have sometimes reflected for what reason the Turks should appoint such marks [niches in their mosques] to direct their faces towards, in prayer. And if I may be allowed to conjecture, I believe they did it at first in testimony of their iconoclastick principle; and to express to them both the reality of the Divine presence there, and at the same time also its invisibility. Maunderell, Trav. p. 15.

Most of those [statues] at York were destroyed, in the first emotions of iconoclastic zeal.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

ICONO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [εἰκὼν and γραφία, Gr.; iconographie, Fr.] A description of pictures, statues, and similar monuments of ancient art.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee,

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind.

Shakspeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames grow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

'Thou would'st have never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect. Shakspeare, Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

ICY-PEARLED.* adj. Studded with pearls, as it were of ice.

So mounting up in icy-pearled car,
Through middle empire of the freezing air
He wander'd long. Milt. Death of a Fair Infant.

IDE'A. n. s. [idée, Fr.; ἰδέα, Gr.] Mental image.

Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,

Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Faifuz.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea. Milton, P. L.

If Chaucer, by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set. Dryd.

IDE'AL.* adj. [ideal, Fr. Cotgrave.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

To IDE'ALIZE. v. n. [from ideal.] To form ideas.

Others attributed it [religion] to meditation and wonder on the beauty and magnificence of nature, or the forebodings and expectations of futurity congenial to man, or their natural propensity to idealize.

Maty, Acc. of Meiner's Hist. of all Relig. (1786).

IDE'ALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To IDE'ATE. v. a. [from idea.] To fancy; to form in idea.

Letters mingle souls;

For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life: But for these
I could ideate nothing which could please.

Donne to Sir H. Wotton, Poems, p. 146.

What good statesmen would they be, who should ideate or fancy such a commonwealth?

Knott, Charity by Cath. P. I. ch. 2. in Chillingworth.

IDENTICAL. adj. [identique, Fr.] The IDENTICK. } same; implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The beard's the identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras.

Their majus is identical with majus.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson, Serm.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley, Serm.

IDENTICALLY.* adv. [from identical.] With sameness.

In artificial things the introduction of a new form makes not the matter to be identically different from what it was. Ross on Sir K. Digby.

IDE'NTICALNESS.* n. s. [from identical.] Sameness.

IDENTIFICATION.* n. s. [from To identify.] Production of sameness; proof of identity.

Shep. He may then be able, for ought we know to the contrary, to join the soul or spirit of man to himself.

Dech. Not so as to make but one person of both; such an identification I take to be impossible.

Shep. You may take it to be so; but I am sure you cannot prove it.

Skellton, Deism Revealed, Dial. vi.

I am not ready to admit the identification of the Romish faith with Gospel faith.

Bp. Watson, Charge.

- He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumier and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
A poor and idle sin. B. Jonson, Sejanus.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thing idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use?

Spenser, F. Q.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs,
when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

He wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers.

To IDLE.† v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
These did no hurt, were sober, but went idling
about the grove with their hands in their pockets, and telling the number of the trees there. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 429.

Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

2. To play lightly.

A lover may bestride the gossomers
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
To *IDLE v. a. To waste idly; to consume unprofitably.

If you have but an hour, will you improve that hour instead of idling it away? Ld. Chesterfield.

IDLEHEADED. adj. [idle and head.]

1. Foolish; unreasonable.

These idleheaded seekers resorted thither, Carew.

2. Delirious; infatuated.

Upon this loss she fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.

*IDLELY adv. [Sax. ibelice.] So our ancestors wrote idly. See several examples in IDLY.

IDLENESS.† n. s. [from idle. Sax. ibel-neþe.] Not very often found in the plural; at least not an instance occurs in Dr. Johnson's examples. Thomson uses it.]

1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.

Nor is excess the only thing which sin breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South, Sermon.

2. Absence of employment.

All which yet could not make us accuse her,
though it made us pine away for spirit, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden, Ovid.

Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.

3. Omission of business.

Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakspeare, Ant. & Cleop.

4. Unimportance; trivialness.

To the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

At last these puling idlenesses laid
Aside, frequent and full the dry divan
Close in firm circle, and set ardent in
For serious drinking. Thomson, Autumn.

5. Inefficacy; uselessness.

6. Barrenness; worthlessness.

Either to have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry. Shakspeare, Othello.

7. Unreasonableness; want of judgement;
foolishness; madness.

There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon, War with Spain.

*IDLEPATED adj. [idle and pate.] Idle-headed; stupid.

Let him be found never so idlepated, he is still a grave drunkard. Ooerbury, Charact. sign. O. S.

IDLER. n. s. [from idle.] A lazy person;
a sluggard.

Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.

Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.

*IDLESBY n. s. [from idle.] An inactive or lazy person.

I know not whether among those "nihil agentes," idlesbys, or "malé agentes," ill spenders of their time, I should place the newsmonger, and amorous trifter, that spendeth his forenoons on his glass and barber. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 501.

IDLY.† adv. [from idle. Sax. ibelice.]

1. Lazily; without employment.

A yong gentleman, or a yong maide, that liveth weltidly and iddelly. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.

To rave or speak idly in sickness. Barret, Alb.
He hath idly gone about the bush a little.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clerg. p. 161.
And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting
breath,

Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.

3. Carelessly; without attention.

In a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.

4. Ineffectually; vainly.

Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

IDOL. n. s. [idole, Fr.; ἱδωλον, idolum,
Lat.]

1. An image worshipped as God.

They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.

A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton, P. L.

The apostle is there arguing against the gnos-ticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god.
Aterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock.
Zech. ii. 17.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Spenser, F. Q.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldier's god, and people's idol.
Denham, Sophy.

IDOLATER.† n. s. [idolatre, Fr.; idololatra,
Lat.]

1. One who pays divine honours to images;
one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable:
first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley, Sermon.

2. Simply, an adorer; a great admirer.

Jonson was an idolater of the ancients. Hurd.

*IDOLATRESS n. s. [from idolater.] She who worships idols.

They would not treat, unless he first acknowledged his father to be a tyrant, and his mother an idolatress. Howell, Lett. iv. 43.

Whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton, P. L.

*IDOLATRICAL adj. [from idolatry.]

Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry.

We have in our church no publique worshipping of idols, no heathenish or idolatratical sacrifice.
Bp. Hooper, Exam. as to Apparel, sign. xxx. 4.

To IDOLATRIZE.† v. a. [from idolater.]

1. To worship idols. Ainsworth.

2. To adore.

Apollo easily perceived, that Lipsius did manifestly idolatrize Tacitus. Tr. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 17.

To *IDOLATRIZE v. n. To offer idolatrous worship.

How should either swearing, or blaspheming,
or idolatrizing, be sin, if there were not a God, against whom they were committed? Fotherby, Atheism. p. 41.

And as the Persians did idolatrize

Unto the sun. Browne, Brit. Past. i. 1.

Succeeding ages would idolatrize,
And as his numbers, so his reliques prize. Valentine on the Death of Donne.

IDOLATRUOS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peachment on Drawing.

IDOLATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDOLATRY. n. s. [idolatrie, Fr.; idololatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;

And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead.

Shakespeare.
Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South.

The kings were distinguished by judgements or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison, Spect.

IDOLISH.* adj. [from idol.] Idolatrous. They have stuffed their idolish temples with the wasteful pillage of your estates.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.
IDOLISM.* n. s. [from idol.] Idolatrous worship; defence of idolatrous worship.

How wilt thou reason with them, how refute Their idolisms, traditions, paradoxes? Milton, P. R.
IDOLIST. n. s. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths Of idolists and atheists. Milton, S. A.

To IDOLIZE.† v. a. [from idol.]

1. To worship idolatrously.
The reason Theodoret assigns for God's changing the diet of men from the fruits of the earth to the flesh of animals is, that, foreknowing they would idolize his creatures, he might aggravate the absurdity, and make it the more ridiculous to do so, by their consuming at their tables what they sacrificed to at their altars.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 246.
2. To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just and wise, Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize.

Denham.
Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broker of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

IDOLIZER.* n. s. [from idolize.] One who loves or reverences to adoration.
Overdoing idolizers of the faculty of free-will.

More, Myst. of Godd. (1660), p. 281.
The idolizers of monarchy, with equal flattery, have attributed the same prerogative to temporal princes. Manningham, Disc. (1681), p. 132.
Though I be not such an idolizer of antiquity as Harris, yet they have great charms for me.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 38.
IDOLOUS.* adj. [from idol.] Idolatrous. Obsolete.

Was not this, thinke you, good wholsom counsel of this idolous byshop?

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. fol. 90. b.
IDONEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Lat.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.
An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void «de jure & facto», and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayiffe.

IDYL. n. s. [εἰδύλλιον, Gr.; idyllium, Lat.] A small short poem.

I. E. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JEALOUS. adj. [jalous, Fr.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't.

Shakespeare, Othello.
Missress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!
Shakespeare.
A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.
2. Emulous; full of competition.

I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: I give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.
I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings, xix. 10.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor. ii. 2.
His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless or moutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon, Hen. VII.
They, jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protesting fate supreme. Milton, P. L.
How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's? Dec. of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JEALOUSLY.† adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance or caution. Sherwood.

JEALOUSNESS. n. s. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me.

King Charles.
JEALOUSY.† n. s. [jealousie, Fr. from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.

But knowing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Spenser, F. Q.
How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embred despair;
And shuddering fear, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thine ecstasy. Shaks.
Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shakespeare, Cymb.
Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance or rivalry.
O how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Jealousy is the fear or apprehension of superiority. Shenstone.

To JEER.† v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

A jeering reprovcr is like a jeering judge, than which there cannot be imagined, either in nature or manners, a thing more odious and intolerable. South, Serm. vii. 150.

To JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.
My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howell, Eng. Tears.

JEER. n. s. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.
Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tipt the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say — she wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JEERER.† n. s. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.

They are the jeerers, mocking, flouting Jacks.
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

This would be brave matter
Unto the jeerers. Ibid.
There you nam'd the famous jeerer. Becum, and Ft. Nice Valour.

JEERING.* n. s. [from jeer.] Mockery.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleveland.

JELLY. n. s. [gelatinum, Lat. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]

1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.

They, distill'd
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the gelly.

The desert came on, and jellies brought. King.
That jell'y's rich, this malmsay healing;

Pray dip your whiskers. Pope, Sat. of Horace.

JEL'LY-BAG.* n. s. A bag through which gelly is distilled.

An epigram, if smart and good,
In all its circumstances shou'd
Be like a jell'y-bag : —
Make it at top both wide and fit,
To hold a budget-full of wit,
And point it at the end. Student, i, 76. (1750).

JEMMINES.* n. s. [from jemmy.] Spruce-ness. A colloquial expression; not used in serious writing.

JEMMY.* adj. [perhaps from gimp; or from gimcrack, in the sense of a smart fellow. See GIMP, and GIMCRACK.] Spruce. A low word.

To this race of words I must refer our vulgar term jemmy; a jemmy fellow, &c. and our quaint though familiar phrase gim-crack.

Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 359.
Jemmy, neatly trimmed; perhaps the new word jemmy should be gimmy. Pegge.

JENNETING. n. s. [corrupted from Junet-ting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

JE'OPARDOUSLY.* adv. [from jeopardous.] In danger; dangerously. Huloet.

JE'OPARDY.* n. s. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner, Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — I had made the same remark as Mr. Bagshaw, and Mr. Malone, that this word is rather a corruption of jeu parti; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is properly a game in which the chances are exactly even. Hence it came to signify any thing uncertain or hazardous. See also Du Cange in V. JOCUS PARTITUS.] Hazard; danger; peril.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chancefull jeopardy.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Why stand we in jeopardy every hour?

1 Cor. xv. 30.
Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

Shakespeare, K. John.
We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

TO JERK.* v. a. [zæpæccan, Sax. corrigere. Lye and Dr. Johnson. — Hreckia, Icel. pulsare, or jarke, pes feriens. Serenius.]

1. To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service : nine or ten times
I thought to've jerkt him here under the ribs. Shakespeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle *jerk*ing
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

2. To throw a stone by hitting the arm against the side; contrasted with throwing, which is done with the arm at full length. A common, and probably an old, word among boys.

TO JERK. v. n. To strike up: to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;

But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry;
And the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanville.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis : — neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden, Lett. to Sir R. Howard.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

We'll run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl

His hood after the kirk. B. Jonson, Underwoods.
Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

3. A throw; a cast; the act of jerking. [from the second meaning of the verb active.]

JE'RKER.* n. s. [from jerk.] One who strikes with a quick smart blow; a whipper; a lasher. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JE'RKIN.* n. s. [cýrtekin, Saxon, Dr. Johnson. — Dutch, jurk, a frock.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shakespeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool?

More, Antid. against Atheism.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South, Sermon.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a firkin. Hudibras.

I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

JE'RKIN. n. s. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth. This should be written gyrkin.

JE'RSY.* n. s. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

She doth sit, and stockings knit
Of jersey and of woollen.

Evans's Old Ballads, i. 179.

JERU'SALEM Artichoke. n. s. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small offsets, and by quartering the roots.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

JESS. n. s. [ject, French; getto, Italian.] A short strap of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hannmer.

If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare, Othello.

JE'SSAMINE. n. s. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines.

Spenser.

JESSE.* n. s. A large brass candlestick, branched into many sconces, hanging down in the middle of a church or choir; so called from the similitude of the branches, at its invention, to those of the "arbor Jessæ," the branch or genealogical tree of Jesse. Cowel.

JE'SSED.* adj. [from jess.] Having jesses on; an heraldic term.

TO JEST.* v. n. [gesticulator, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Goth. gys, irrisio. Serenius.]

1. To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclesi. viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unpriov'd?
— You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. To play a part in a mask. Obsolete.

As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

JEST.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest

Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me? then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakspeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-see, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

4. A mask. Obsolete.

He promis'd us in honour of our guest,
To grace our banquet with some pompous jest. Kid, Span. Tragedy.

5. A gest; an action. See Gest.

The jests or acts of princes or captains. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 204.

J E 'S T E R. n. s. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now, as a jester, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A jester, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the First.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

J E 'S T I N G. * n. s. [from jest.] Utterance of sarcasms or jests.

Neither fildiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient. Ephes. v. 4.

J E 'S T I N G - S T O C K. * n. s. A laughing-stock; an object of derision.

An ape, quoth she, and jesting-stock
Is man to God in skye,
As oft as he doth trust his wit
Too much, presuming hie. Googe, Zodiack of Life, (1565,) sign. Q. iii.

J E 'S T I N G L Y. * adv. [from jesting.] In jest; with merriment.

If he be unmarried, and sojourn, he never talks with any woman alone, but in the audience of others, and that seldom, and then also in a serious manner, never jestingly or sportfully. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 9.

When his daughter-in-law [Sir Henry Spelman's] returned home from visiting her neighbours, he would always ask her what of antiquity she had heard or observed, and if she brought home no such account, he would chide her, jestingly. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 541.

J E 'S U I T. * n. s. [Fr. Jesuite.] One of a religious and learned order, founded by Ignatius Loyola, a Spanish military man, in the sixteenth century; which presumed to take the name of the Society of Jesus. "This society having been erected on purpose to fight the pope's battles, not with prayers, and tears, and monastick addresses, but with learning, policy, and address; its members are not, by its constitution, bound to have a choir for the performance of divine offices, neither have they one any where: nor are they bound to attend processions; nor to use any of the monastick austerities, which would interrupt their studies, or might render their address less agreeable to all sorts of people; and for that reason the other orders will hardly allow the Jesuits to be monasticks or religious." Dr. Geddes's Tracts, vol. iii. p. 434. edit. 1730. The word, in our language, has been applied to men of great cunning, craft, and deceit; whence the common word jesuitical.

They think it as unsafe to commit religion and liberty to their arbitrating as to a synagogue of Jesuits. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

We justly reproach the Jesuits, who have adapted all Christianity to temporal and political views, for maintaining a position so repugnant to the laws of nature, morality, and religion, that an evil may be committed for the sake of good, which may arise from it. Addison, Freeholder, No. 7.

J E 'S U I T E D. * adj. [from the noun.] Conforming to the principles of the Jesuits.

Our jesuitized papists have a disease that holds them much like this of the beggar. Dr. White, Sermon. (1615,) p. 29.

At Rome the pope's nuncio, and her jesuitized mother here. Milton, Eikonocl. § 7.

J E 'S U I T E S S. * n. s. A woman adopting the principles of the Jesuits.

These forward women usurp upon the fashions of their husbands, and will have their faces seen as well as their voices heard; as the Jesuitesses of late time dared both to attempt and practise, till the late restraint of pope Urban curbed and suppressed them. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

J E S U ' T I C A L. * } adj. [from jesuit.] Belonging to a Jesuit; and thence, in our language, equivocating, imposing upon.

The place is so full and clear, that all the miserable and strained evasions of the jesuitical gain-sayers cannot elude it. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 276.

Though for fashion's sake called a parliament, yet by a jesuitical sleight not acknowledged, though called so. Milton, Eikonocl. § 13.

The direction of our attention here is but a jesuitical juggle. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

Detesting those jesuitick principles. Dryden.

J E S U ' T I C A L L Y. * adv. [from jesuitical.] Craftily.

This is full out as jesuitically contrived, as the other was said and thought to be. Eckhard, Observ. Ans. Cont. of the Cler. Pref.

J E 'S U I T I S M. * n. s. The principles and doctrine of the Jesuits.

Puritanism—is only reformed Jesuitism, as Jesuitism is nothing else but popish puritanism. South, Sermon. v. 219.

J E T. † n. s. [ζατα, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Lat. Formerly our word was geat, or jeat. So Barret and Fuller write it.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with canal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a fet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,

The neck slight shaded. Thomson, Summer.

2. [Jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next in adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes?

Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser, Husbandry.

4. Drift; scope. Get, or jet, was anciently used for fashion; as by Chaucer, and Hoccleve.

The true jet of the argument was to be drawn from precedent. Wyncham.

To J E T. † v. n. [jetter, Fr. yta, Icel. exire, trufere; from the Su. Goth. ut, extra, foras.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakspeare.

The west end yields a right magnificent aspect, by reason of an eminency of land jetting out farther than the rest. Blount, Voyage to the Levant, (1650,) p. 17.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait; "to jette lordly through the streets, that men may see them." Barret.

Another sort jetting up and down, to wayte when my ladie shall be ready to see a cast of their office. Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. G. vi. Uncomely walking, and jetting up, and down, and overthwart the church. Homilies, B. ii.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Amongst the chasteest dames thou jett'st it now,
With honesty stamp'd on thy haughty brow. Fanshawe, Tr. of Past. Fado.

3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, Fr.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wiseman.

J E 'T S A M. } n. s. [jetter, Fr.] Goods or J E 'T S O N. } other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.

J E 'T T E E. * n. s. [Fr. jettee, "a jettie or juttie, a bearing out or leaning over in buildings; also, the bank of a ditch, &c."] Cotgrave. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this substantive in any shape. Shakspeare has jutty. See JUTTY. His elder, Skelton, humorously describes a person "jawed like a jetty." Poems, p. 124. And Cotgrave, we see, gives it jettie or juttie. Why the English form should of late have been abandoned for the French, no good reason can be assigned.]

1. A projection of part of any building. See JUTTY.

An out-butting or jettie of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house.

Florio, in V. Sporto, Ital. Dict. (1598.)

2. A kind of pier; a mole projected into the sea.

A curious harbour, formed by three stone jetties, carried out a good way into the sea. Smollett.

They found the demolition at Dunkirk entirely at a stand; instead of demolition, they found construction; for the French were then at work on the repair of the jetties.

Burke, Obs. on the State of the Nat. (1769.)

Some jetties and piers of defence, ill placed, had been made. Prof. to Smeaton's Reports, (1797.)

- JETTER n. s. [from To jet.] A spruce fellow; one who struts.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

- JETTY, adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Her hair

Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd.

Prior.

Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,

Vied for his love in jetty bowers below. Pope.

- TO JETTY v. n. [Fr. jettier.] To jut. See JETTE.

An out-butting — of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house.

Florio, Ital. Dict. (1598.)

- JEW n. s. [from Judah.] An Hebrew; an Israelite. "Since their return from the Babylonian captivity, they lost, in great measure, the name of Israelites, and were called Jews, from Judah, their principal tribe, which made up the chief of the captives in Babylon, and consequently of those who returned from thence." Collyer, Sacred Interpr. vol. i. ch. 16.

The learned Chrysostome, in a sermon against the Jews, tells them this fact [the vain attempt to rebuild the temple] was then fresh in the memories even of their young men, that it happened but twenty years ago, and that it was attested by all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, where they might still see the marks of it in the rubbish of that work, from which the Jews desisted in so great a fright, and which even Julian had not the courage to carry on. This fact, which is in itself so miraculous, and so indisputable, brought over many of the Jews to Christianity; and shews us, that after our Saviour's prophecy against it, the temple could not be preserved from the plough passing over it, by all the care of Titus, who would fain have prevented its destruction, and that instead of being re-edified by Julian, all his endeavours towards it did but still more literally accomplish our Saviour's prediction, that not one stone should be left upon another. Addison on the Chr. Rel. § 8.

- As rich as a JEW A proverbial phrase.

We are apt to say, in a proverbial way, as rich as a Jew; but the Jews, take them in general, are not a rich people. There have been always some few among them that were immensely wealthy, and it was from the observation of these few that the proverb arose. Pegge, Anonym. v. 20.

- JEWEL. n. s. [jouvaux, Fr. *jeweele*n, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture.

Shakespeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

Shakespeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world; a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel.

South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,

Stol'n by my daughter!

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Proud fame's imperial seat

With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.

— Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes

Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

- JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. s. The place where the regal ornaments are reposit- ed.

The king has made him master of the jewel-house.

Shakespeare.

- TO JEWEL v. a. [from the noun.] To dress or adorn with jewels.

You are as well jewel'd as any of them: your ruff and linen about you is much more pure than theirs.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

- JEWEL-LIKE adj. [jewel and like.] Brilliant as a jewel.

Her eyes as jewel-like,

And cas'd as richly. Shakespeare, Pericles.

- JEWELLER. n. s. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller.

Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

- JEWESS n. s. [from Jew.] An Hebrew woman.

Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess.

Acts, xxiv. 24.

There will come a Christian by,

Will be worth a Jewess' eye.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

- JEWISH adj. Denoting a Jew; relating to the Jews.

Not giving heed to Jewish fables. Tū. i. 14.

It was customary with the Jews to be called by a Jewish name among their own countrymen, and by another among the Gentiles. Hence we find Thomas called Didymus, St. John, xi. 16.; and Tabitha called Dorcas, Acts, ix. 36.; and Saul had the Roman name of Paul.

Collyer, Sacred Interpreter.

- JEWISHLY adv. [from Jewish.] In a Jewish manner.

And howsoe'er French kings most Christian be,
Their crowns are circumsid'd most Jewishly.

Donne, Poems, p. 86.

- JEWISHNESS n. s. [from Jewish.] The religious rites of the Jews.

These faithlesse fondse newe-fanglers would bring us again from the fayth unto paganisme, and unto the old Jewishness.

Martin, Marr. of Pr. (1554), sign. L. iii. b.

- JEWRY n. s.

1. Judea.

In Jewry is God known. Ps. lxxvi. 1.

2. A district inhabited by Jews; whence probably the street so called in London. The word is very old in this sense.

There was in Asie, in a great citee,
Amonges Christen folke a jewerie.

Chaucer, Prior. Tale

JEW'S-EAR* n. s. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — "The arbor Juda is thought to be that whereon Judas hanged himself, and not upon the elder tree as it is vulgarly said. Gerardus Herbal, edit. Johnson, p. 1428. I am clear that the mushrooms or excrescencies of the elder tree, called auricula Juda in Latin, and commonly rendered Jews' ears, ought to be translated Judas' ears from the popular superstition above mentioned." Brand. Pop. Antiq. ii. 587. n.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup: from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill, Mat. Med.

An herb called jew's-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashes; in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

JEW'S-HARP* n. s. [The Jews-trump, or, as it is more generally pronounced, the Jew-trump, seems to take its name from the nation of the Jews, and is vulgarly believed to be one of their instruments of musick. — But, upon enquiry, you will not find any such musical instrument as this described by the authors that treat of the Jewish musick. In short, this instrument is a mere boy's play-thing, and incapable in itself of being joined either with a voice or any other instrument; and I conceive the present orthography to be a corruption of the French jeutrumpe, a trump to play with. And in the Belgick, or Low-Dutch, from whence come many of our toys, a trump is a rattle for children. Sometimes they will call it a Jew's-harp; and another etymon given of it is Jaw's-harp, because the place where it is played upon is between the jaws! Pegge, Anonym. i. 82.] A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEW'S-MALLOW. n. s. [corchorus, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW'S-STONE. n. s. An extraneous fossil, being the clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria.

Hill, Mat. Med.

JEW'S-TRUMP.* See JEW'S-HARP.

As playing on a gittern, or a jew's-trump.
Beaumont and Fl. Lov. Progress.

JE'ZEBEL.* n. s. Formerly employed to denote a forward, impertinent woman; and perhaps not yet wholly disused.

You are to know, sir, that a jezebel (so called by the neighbourhood from displaying her pernicious charms at her window) has a thousand little tricks, and fooleries, to attract the eyes of all the idle young fellows in the neighbourhood.

Spectator, No. 175.

Having myself observed a nest of jezebels near the Temple, who make it their diversion to draw up the eyes of young templars, that at the same time they may see them stumble in an unlucky gutter which runs under the window. Ibid.

IF.† conjunction. [gīf; Saxon; the imperative of the Goth. gīfan and Sax. gīpan, to give, to concede, to allow. Skinner and Ray have preceded, in this deduction at least from the Saxon, Mr. Horne Tooke; who, however, has abundantly illustrated it by examples from our ancient writers, who used gīf and yef, where we now employ if as well as the verb give, the word that being generally understood or implied in the former case; and then the meaning being, "allow that, grant that, the thing be so;" which senses we annex to give. God gīf; God grant that; a very old expression. Yet it may not be omitted, that if has existed in the Gothic language without the deduction named by Mr. Tooke, or the possibility of such deduction, as noticed by Dr. Jamieson under the Scottish gīf. The old word is gau, and jabai; to the former the Sax. zu, if, corresponds. These have no connection with the word give. Mr. Tooke should have shewn why there was none. The Icelandic if is also the hypothetical particle; which, as well as the Goth. conjunctions, Serenius, and Ihre connect with the Su. Goth. yef, doubt, exception. I shall not say with Mr. Callender, that "to derive if from gīf, as some writers have done, is ridiculous;" yet I would not overpass the pretensions of if as a radical word.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs, or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
— If! talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.

Thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath, if that thou hearken unto the commandment of the Lord thy God. Deut. xxviii. 14.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Aterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft has heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Cædipus deserve thy care. Pope, Statius.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rise they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't — it may be — and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

4. Though. Not usual.

They themselves decreed
Their own revolt, not if; if I foreknew,

IF'FAITH.* adv. [an abbreviation of in faith.] Indeed; truly. See the adverb FAITH.

If faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did. Shaksp. M. Wives of Windsor.
Then I feague it away if faith.
D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

IGNARO.* n. s. [Latin.] A contemptuous term of elder days for a block-head.

It was intolerable insolence in such ignaros to challenge title for popery, which they understood not. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625.) p. 296.

No man can be such an ignaro, as to imagine his sinews to be made of wire, or his body to be immured in brass. Hewitt, Serm. (1658.) p. 96.

IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Lat.] Fiery; containing fire: emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanville, Scepis.

TO IGNI'FY.* v. a. [ignis and fio, Lat.] To form into fire.

The ignited part of matter was formed into the body of the sun. Stukely, Palæogr. Sacra, p. 20.

IGNI'FLUOUS.* adj. [ignifluus, Lat.] Flowing with fire. Cockeram.

IGNI'POTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Lat.] Presiding over fire.

Vulcan is call'd the power ignipotent.
Pope, Homer.

IGNIS FATUUS.* n. s. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern. Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui.
Newton, Opticks.

An ignis fatuus, that bewitches
And leads men into pools and ditches.

Scared and guided by the ignis fatuus of popular superstition.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 32.

TO IG'NITE.† v. a. [from ignis, fire, Lat.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew, Museum.

The ignited particles hasten to dip themselves in the neighbouring stream.

Sir H. Sheere, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 10.

Plato, in his Timeus, enumerating the ignited juices, names wine in the first place.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 212.

TO IG'NITE.* v. n. To become red hot. A term of chymistry.

IGNI'TION. n. s. [ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNI'TIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur r ignitable parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IGNI'VOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanos and ignivomus mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

IGNOBIL'ITY.* n. s. [Lat. ignobilitas.] Want of magnanimity.

To Locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectuously seeketh it to the glory of God, is a property belonging only to the hypocrysh Pharisees and false lawyers. A more signe of ignobility can not be sene, then to hyde such noble monuments.

Bale, in Leland's Newe Year's Gift.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Lat.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

IGNO'BLENESS.* n. s. [from ignoble.] Want of dignity; want of splendour: as, "ignobleness of birth." Ainsworth.

IGNO'BLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignobly! Milton, P. L.
Here, over-match'd in fight; in heaps they lie;
There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly.

Dryden, Æn.

IGNOMI'NIUS. adj. [ignominieus, Fr. ignominiosus, Lat.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominious. Milton, P. L.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate.

Dryden, Juv.

They gave, and she transferr'd the curs'd advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise

By ignominious arts for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.]
Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully;
shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some alloy to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

IGNOMINY. n. s. [ignominie, Fr. igno- minia, Lat.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.
Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Praiseworthy, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNOMY.* n. s. This barbarous abbreviation of ignominy occurs very often in our old authors; and is not merely a poetical licence.

Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave!
Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. p. 1.

Sprinkling the terms of honour wholly on the one part, and of hatred and ignomy on the other.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.
They are paid in their own coin; they are with ignomy repaid reproach.

Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. p. 286.

IGNORAMUS.* n. s. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impannelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain un instructed pretender. A low word, Dr. Johnson says.—South uses it with good effect, and probably adopted it from the character of Ignoramus in the facetious Latin comedy of that name, first printed in 1630, the keen and admirable satire in which is exactly suitable to South's turn of mind.

If ever you find an ignoramus in place and power, and can have so little conscience and so much confidence as to tell him to his face, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world beside;—I dare undertake, that, as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down, and admit the commendation, though he cannot believe the thing! South, Sermon. ii. 335.

As if, forsooth, there could not be so much as a few houses fired, a few ships taken, or any other calamitous accident befall this little corner of the world, but that some apocalyptic ignoramus must presently find and pick it out of some abused, martyred prophecy of Ezekiel, Daniel, or the Revelation. South, Sermon. v. 57.

IGNORANCE. n. s. [ignorance, Fr. igno- ratio, Lat.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same.

Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n.
Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows!
Shakespeare.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise. Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law. Sherlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignor- ances. Com. Pray.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances.
Tob. iii. 2.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, Fr.; igno- rans, Lat.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast.
Ps. lxxiii.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare, Coriol.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge

Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not
In ignorant concealment. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.
Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon, Ess.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton, P. L.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.
Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.
His shipping,

Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANTLY. n. s. One untaught, unlettered, un instructed.

Let this dress carry what price it will
With noble ignorants. B. Jonson, Forest.

Look into the private closets of their devout ignorants, what difference shall you find between the image and the suppliant? Bp. Hall, Quo vadis.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach. Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save.

Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

TO IGNO'RE.* v. a. [ignorere, Fr. ignoro,
Lat.] Not to know; to be ignorant of.
This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.
Dr. Johnson says. Boyle, however, is guiltless of the introduction; for the word occurs in our lexicography long before Boyle wrote. Thus Cotgrave renders the Fr. ignorere "to ignore," and so Sherwood defines ignore "to be ignorant of." But it is a word not worthy to be used.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts by me alleged.
Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNO'SCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Lat.] Capable of pardon. Dict.

IGNO'TE.* adj. [Lat. ignotus.] Unknown.
Like ignore, a very pedantick word,
and not to be received.

A traveller passing through the confines of ignore countries.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634.) p. 1.

Shall such very ignore and contemptible pre-tenders be allowed a place among the most renowned of poetick writers?

Phillips, Theat. Poet. (1675.) Pref.

JIB.* n. s. [In naval language.] The foremost sail of a ship.

TO JIB.* v. a. To shift a boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other.

TO JIBE.* See TO GIBE.

JIC'KAJOG.* n. s. [A cant word, from jog;
sometimes pronounced jig jog.] A shake; a push.

An some writer (that I know) had had but the penning o'this matter, he would ha' made you such a jickajog i' the booths, you should ha' thought an earthquake had been i' the Fair.

B. Jonson, Barth. Fair, Induct.

JIFFY.* n. s. [Now a colloquial word in several parts of England; and sometimes used in ludicrous writing. It is also a Scotch expression, and Dr. Jamieson considers it as a corruption of gliff.]
An instant; a moment.

And then shall each Paddy, who once on the Liffy

Perchance held the helm of some mackarel boy,
Hold the realm of the state, and dispense in a

Jiffy
More fishes than ever he caught when a boy!

Rejected Addresses.

JIG.* n. s. [giga, Italian; geige, Teut.
gige, Dan. and gigia, Icel. a fiddle; and the old Fr. gige, or gigue, "sorte d'instrument de musique a vent." Roque-fort. Chaucer uses gigges in the sense of "irregular sounds produced by the wind." Tyrrwhitt. The French instrument, borrowed from the northern, is considered by Menage as a sort of fiddle; whence the application of the word to the tune or dance.]

1. A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.
All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton, Comus.
The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting.

Fenton.
They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbutnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.
2. A ludicrous composition; a ballad; a song. Obsolete.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig-given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. B. Jonson.

A worthy story, howsoever writ,
For language, modest mirth, conceit, or wit,
Meets oftentimes with the sweet commendation
Of "hang't, 'tis scurvy!" when for approbation
A jig shall be clapp'd at, and every rhyme
Prais'd and applauded by a clamorous chime.

Beaumont and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn, Prol.
To JIG.† v. n. [from the noun. Old Fr.
gigner.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

With earnest endeavour pushed forward to gaming, *jigg*ing, wasailing, and mixed dancing.

Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
As for the *jigg*ing part and figures of dances,
I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER.† n. s. [jig and maker.] One who dances or plays merrily; or who writes songs and ballads.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

JIGGER.* n. s. [from jig.] Ash.
1. One that jigs.

2. In naval language, a machine to hold on the cable, when it is heaved into the ship by the revolution of the windlass. Chambers.

JIGGISH.* adj. [from jig.] Disposed or suitable to a jig.

She is never sad, and yet not jiggish.

Habington's Castara, sign. A. 8.
This man makes on the violin a certain jiggish noise to which I dance. Spectator, No. 276.

A kit is more jiggish than the fiddle itself, and never sounds but to a dance. Tatler, No. 157.

JIGGUMBOB. n. s. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras.

JILL.* n. s. This is the old form of writing gill, a contemptuous name for a woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.

Be merry, but with modesty;
Lest some men blame thy honesty:
Let manners thine be pleasant still;
With Jacks yet do not play the Jill.

Kendal, Flowers of Epigrams, (1577.)

JILL-FLIRT.* n. s. A giddy, light, or wanton woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.

We are infested with a parcel of jillflirts, who are not capable of being mothers of brave men;
for the infant partakes of the temper and disposition of its mother. Guardian, No. 26.

JILT.† n. s. [gilia, Icelandic, to entrap in an amour. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland. Dr. Johnson.—It may be from the Sax. gæll, gæl, wanton. See the sixth sense of GILL. For, in the use of gill or jill by our old authors, it is evident, that the word first signified a loose or wanton woman; whence its softened application to her who cheats her lover.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jill,
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Ottway, Orphan.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jills rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

To JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick
a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden, Juv.
Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted;
bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

To JILT. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceits.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

JIMMERS.* n. s. Jointed hinges. Bailey.
A northern word. Grose. See GIMMER.

The things of this world hang together by very weak and slender jimmers.

Letter of Dr. Hen. More, 1680, Life, &c. of Dr.
More by Ward, p. 156.

JIMMY.* See JEMMY.

JIMP.* adj. Neat; handsome; elegant of shape. See GIMP. Used in Scotland, and in the north of England; and sometimes pronounced jim.

To JINGLE.† v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed. Dr. Johnson.

—It is the same as to gingle, where see the etymology.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling
fools? Shakspeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.
What crowds of these, impetuously bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

To JINGLE.* v. a. To shake so that a shrill noise may be made.

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

JINGLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.

2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.
If you thing where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon, Ess.

JIPPO.* n. s. [Fr. juppe.] A waistcoat;
a jacket; a kind of stays worn by ladies.
This unnoticed word is near enough to the parent French, which has long been absurdly converted into jump. See the third sense of JUMP.

There [is] as much insolence under a friese
jerkin as a velvet jippo. Jura Cleri, &c. (1661.) p. 14.

Over all this they wear a jippo, not unlike the jippo's worn by the French ladies.
Hist. Descript. of the Kingd. of Macassar, (1701.) p. 80.

ILE. n. s. [corrupted from aisle, Fr.] A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aisle.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

ILE. n. s. [aisle, Fr.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

ILEUS. n. s. [Lat.]

An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is really either a circum-volution, or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot.

I'LEX. n. s. [Lat.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as if it were painted. Mortimer.

I'LIACK. adj. [iliacus, Lat.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliack passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

I'LIACK Passion. A kind of nervous col-ick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those, who die of the iliack passion, have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

ILK.† adj. [elc, Saxon.] This word is still retained in Scotland, and the north of England; and denotes each: as ilk ane of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as, Mackintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Mackintosh of Mackintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend

Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, (who knows not Rosalind?)
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

ILL.† adj. [contracted from evil, and retaining all its senses. Dr. Johnson.—
Icel. illr; Sueth. (Kon. Styr.) ill, malus, perversus. Vox antiquissima. Serenius.

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL. Ill is but rarely applied to the person.

There's some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, till the Heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat;
but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours.

Bacon, Ess.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline
the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.

Bacon.

He was saying to himself, that he was a very ill man to go on in visiting and professing love to Flavia, when his heart was enthralled to another.

Spectator, No. 398.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. The Teut. evil often denotes disease. See Kilian in V. EVEL. This sense of ill is to be referred to ail, which is the Goth. aglo, tribulation; Sax. adl, disease.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges.

Temple.

ILL. n. s.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;

But are compell'd to avarice alone;

For then in virtue's shape they follow vice.

Dryden, Juv.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,

Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate, Juv.

Yet plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,

Though never let the noble mind despair;

When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,

The gods their timely succour interpose;

And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,

By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

ill at ease, both she and all her train

The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain.

Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.

Thou desir'st

The punishment all on thyself! alas!

Bear thine own first, ill able to sustain

His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,

And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton.

ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state.

Dryden.

ILL, † substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

Johnson.

When the substantive is compounded, the compound word mostly wants explanation; because the two words, when separated, seldom retain the same meaning, which they have when joined. But this is not the case with compounds of the adverb; they only require explanation, when the sense happens to be altered by the composition. Mason.

ILL. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul!

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

No look, no last adieu, before he went!

In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent.

Dryden, Æn.

I know

The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound.

Philips.

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift, Examiner.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride

To wring from me and tell to them my secret.

Milton, S. A.

A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,

To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told

A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

ILL. adverb.

There sounded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad.

Wisd. xviii. 10.

My colleague,

Being so ill affected with the gout,

Will not be able to be there in person.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

The examples

Of every minute's instance, present now,

Have put us in these ill beseming arms. Shaksp.

Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:

I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift

Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd.

We simple toasters take delight

To see our women's teeth look white;

And every saucy ill bred fellow

Prior.

The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her.

Sidney.

Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits.

Collier.

There grows,

In my most ill compos'd affection such

A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To what end this ill concerted lye,

Palpable and gross? Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects.

Addison on the War.

The second daughter was a peevish, froward, ill conditioned creature as ever was.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

No Persian arras hides his homely walls

With antic vest, which, through their shady fold,

Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold.

Dryden, Virg.

You shall not find me, daughter,

After the slander of most step-mothers, ill ey'd unto you. Shakespeare, Cymb.

I see thy sister's tears,

Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,

In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison, Cato.

Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil

Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill.

Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.

— And you sped, sir?

— Very ill favouredly.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.

The fabled dragon never guarded more

The golden fleece, than he his ill got store.

Dryden, Juv.

Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt ring men much better than himself.

Addison, Cato.

ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private and the publick rest. Waller.
That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.

Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came.

Milton, P. L.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged superfluity.

Garth, Ovid.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Esrange.

The match had been so ill made for Flexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence.

Sidney.

These are the product

Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,

Where good with bad were match'd. Milton, P. L.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin,

Dispirited with frequent overthrows,

Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryd.

He will not hear me out!

Was ever criminal forbid to lead?

Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaricious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meaneast cottager, in any bargain for thythes. Swift.

Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face!

Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,

Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;

Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,

Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn.

Dryden.

There motley images her fancy strike,

Figures ill pair'd and similes unlike. Pope.

Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;

Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love.

Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intensitive on the bridal day.

Pope, Odyssey.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.

The god inform'd

This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men.

Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.

ill spirited Wor'ster did we not send grace,

Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakespeare.

From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove

An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?

To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:

ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree.

Pope, Odyssey.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,

For death unfinish'd and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden, Ovid.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

To *ILL v. a. To reproach. A northern word. Grose. It is also used in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Supplement in voce.

IL, before words beginning with l, stands for in.

ILL'CERABLE* adj. [illacerabilis, Lat.] That cannot be torn. Cockeram.

ILL'CRYMABLE* adj. [illacrymabilis, Lat.] Incapable of weeping. Dict.

ILL'PSE† n. s. [illapsus, Lat.]
1. Gradual emission or entrance of one thing into another.

What ravishing transports now
Seize on that intellect! how doth it glow
With fresh illapses of the purest light.

J. Hall on the Death of Ld. Hastings, Lac. Mus. (1650).

The prophetick illapses could never grace an impure soul. Spenser on Vulg. Proph. (1665), p. 40.

As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the illapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson, Summer.

Passion's fierce illapse
Rouses the mind's whole fabrick.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

To ILL'AQUEATE† v. a. [illaqueo, Lat.]
To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

I am illaqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion. More, Div. Dialogues.

They, that take upon them to be the only absolvers from sin, are themselves held fast in the snares of eternal death; and do as necessarily illaqueate all others therein whom they proselyte to their religion. More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

ILL'AQUEATION† n. s. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation. Brown.

They wholly gave themselves up to learn to wrangle, and arts of illaqueation.

Evelyn to Bp. Nicholson, Nic. Ep. Corr. i. 140.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another; a noose.

ILL'ATION† n. s. [illatio, Lat.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Which might be inferred by those, that were rather apt to make evil than good illations of our proceeding. Bacon, Rep. in the H. of Com. 5 Jac.
Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

ILL'ATIVE† adj. [illatus, Lat.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

There is a great deal of difference between a mere illative necessity, which consists only in the logical consequence of one thing upon another, and between a causal necessity, which efficiently and antecedently determines and puts the faculty upon working. South, Serm. viii. 89.

In common discourse or writing such casual particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and therefore. Watts.

ILL'ATIVE* n. s. That which denotes illation or conclusion.

This [word] for that leads the text in, is both a relative, and an illative; referring to what he had said in the foregoing words; and inferring a necessary consequence of the one clause upon the other: "Purge out the old leaven: for Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us."

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 186.

ILL'ATIVELY* adv. [from illative.] By illation or conclusion.

Most commonly taken illatively.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 434.

ILL'UDABLE† adj. [illaudabilis, Lat.] Unworthy of praise or commendation.

This word is not coined by Milton; for it exists in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar, more than half a century before the Publication of Paradise Lost. Strength from truth divided and from just, Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise.

Milton, P. L.

You, my lord, have, I fear, been awed into a restraint of your genius in that point, by that ill-understood, (or otherwise) ill-grounded, and illaudable maxim of Mr. Pope.

"For fools admire, but men of sense approve."

Delany, Observ. on Ld. Orrery, p. 102.

ILL'UDABLY* adv. [from illaudable.] Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not illudably, too favourable a judgement of their own country. Broome.

ILL'CEBROUS* adj. [illecebrosus, Lat.] Full of allurements. Not in use.

Not the illecebrous delections of Venus, but the valiant acts and noble affairs of princes.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 19.

The study is elegant, and the matter illecebrous, that is to say, swete to the reader.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 120. b.

ILL'GAL* adj. [in and legalis, Lat.] Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILL'GALITY* n. s. [old Fr. illegalité.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed, of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings by virtue of them. Clarendon.

After the restoration from the captivity, down to the days of our Saviour, the priests were notoriously generals, soldiers, judges, statesmen, and chief ministers of state; and even kings; without any reproof or mark of illegality taken notice of by our Saviour, or his Apostles; just as they might be teachers in the synagogue, and doctors of the law. But they enjoyed none of these posts in right of their priesthood; they were only allowed to them as to any other qualified Jew.

Bp. Story on the Priesthood, p. 33.

To ILL'GALIZE* v. a. [in and legalize.]

To render illegal.

ILL'GALLY† adv. [from illegal.] In a manner contrary to law.

Matches illegally struck up, contrary to the pretended conditions.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 9.

ILL'GALNESS* n. s. [from illegal.] The state of being illegal. Scott.

ILL'GIBLY* n. s. [from illegible.] Incapability of being read.

ILL'GIBLE* adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Lat.] That cannot be read.

The secretary poured the ink-box all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible. Howell.

ILL'GIBLY* adv. [from illegible.] In a manner not to be read.

ILL'GITIMACY* n. s. [from illegitimate.] State of bastardy.

ILL'GITIMATE† adj. [in and legitimus, Lat.]

1. Unlawfully begotten; not begotten in wedlock.

Grieve not at your state;

For all the world is illegitimate. Cleaveland.

Being illegitimate, I was deprived of that endearing tenderness and uncommon satisfaction, which a good man finds in the love and conversation of a parent. Addison, Spect.

2. Not genuine. See the second sense of ILLEGITIMATION. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

To ILL'GITIMATE* v. a. [from the adjective.] To render illegitimate; to prove a person illegitimate.

The cardinal, his uncle, would first have illegitimated him.

Sir H. Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 479.

You will be the instruments of giving being to illegitimated issue, who are born to shame and contempt. Bp. Burnet, Serm. p. 323.

Born with a legal claim to honour and to affluence, he was in two months illegitimated by the parliament. Johnson, Life of Savage.

ILL'GITIMATELY* adv. [from illegitimate.] Not begotten in wedlock.

ILL'GITIMATION† n. s. [from illegitimate.]

1. The state of one not begotten in wedlock.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of his hatred to both his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexes, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

2. Want of genuineness.

Many such like pieces, which, neither in their sense nor idiom agreeable with the times they pretend to, do bear in their very fronts the apparent brands of illegitimation.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662), p. 57.

ILL'VIALE* adv. [lever, Fr.] That cannot be levied or exacted.

He rectified the method of collecting his revenue, and removed obsolete and illeviable parts of charge. Hale.

ILL'CED* adj. Having an ordinary or ugly face.

Then can he term his dirty ill-fac'd bride

Lady, and queen, and virgin deified!

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 7.

ILL'VOURED* adj. Deformed.

O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults

Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Shakespeare.

ILL'VOUREDLY† adv.

1. With deformity.

Make them look so rustily and ill-favour'dly, as might well become such wearers.

Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

Death doth play the fool with thee;

Shewing his teeth, laughing ill-favour'dly.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, Sign. P. 4.

A practice, which, duly seen into, and stripped of its hypocritical barks, could not but look very odiously and ill-favouredly. South, Sermon ii. 153.
 2. Roughly; ruggedly; in ludicrous language.

He shook him very ill-favouredly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all wheresoever he came. Howell.

ILLFAVOUREDNESS. † n. s. Deformity.

The cheeks and the neck—might grace and beautify the ill-favouredness of the rest.

Harmar, Trans. of Beza's Sermon. (1587) p. 176.

ILLIBERAL. † adj. [illiberalis, Lat.]

1. Not noble; not ingenuous.

The charity of most men is grown so cold, and their religion so illiberal. King Charles.

2. Not munificent; not generous; sparing. Yet subsist they did, and well too: an argument that that earth did not deal out their nourishment with an oversparing or illiberal hand.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Mean; homely.

There is no art, neither liberal nor illiberal, but it cometh from God, and leadeth to God.

Fatherly, Atheism. (1622), p. 172.

ILLIBERALLY. n. s. [illiberalitas, Lat. from illiberal.]

1. Meanness of mind.

2. Parsimony; niggardliness; want of munificence.

The illiberality of parents, in allowance towards their children, is an harmful error, and acquaints them with shifts. Bacon.

ILLIBERALLY. adv. [from illiberal.] Disingenuously; meanly.

One that had been bountiful only upon surprise and incogitancy, illiberally retracts. Decay of Piety.

ILLICIT. adj. [illicitus, Lat. illicite, Fr.] Unlawful; as, an illicit trade.

ILLICITLY. adv. [from illicit.] Unlawfully.

ILLICITNESS. n. s. [from illicit.] Unlawfulness.

ILLICITOUS. adj. [illicitus, Lat.] Unlawful. This is the old adjective, and is found in Cotgrave and Sherwood. Illicit is modern.

TO ILLIGHTEN. † v. a. [in and lighten.]

To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Ralegh, Dr. Johnson says. This is not the case. It appears to have been common.

Corporeal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor diaphanous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illighted. Ralegh.

This tale comes to Chrysostome by a third person, not by the illighted saint himself.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 78.
 To illighten every one that cometh into it, [the world.]

Gataker, God's Eye upon Israel, (1645), Pref.
Illightened minds see a greater lustre in knowledge than in the fine gold.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 37.

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limes, Lat.] That cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the subtiler heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idolatry direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown.

With what an awful world-revolving power, Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along The illimitable void! Thomson, Summer.

ILLIMITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITATION. * n. s. [from illimited.]

What admits of no certain determination.

The illimitation of age, and the miseries that attend it. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, of Old Age, §. 1.

ILLIMITED. † adj. [in and limes, Latin, illimité, Fr.] Unbounded; interminable.

They saw his power illimited and irresistible.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

In the former parts, the omnipotence of a Christian suffered no restraint; it was illimited, unconfin'd. Hales, Rem. p. 126.

Neither doth the use or exercise of this dominion depend upon any one, so as to receive any direction or regulation, or to render any account of the administration of it; as being illimited, absolute, and supreme; and so the fountain from whence all dominion in any other is derived.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

ILLIMITEDNESS. n. s. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon.

ILLITERACY. * n. s. [from illiterate.] Want of learning.

As I believe that what I have mentioned gave rise to the opinion of Shakspeare's want of learning; so what has continued it down to us may have been the many blunders and illiteracies of the first publishers of his works. Pope, Pref. to Shaks.

The deplorable condition of indigence and illiteracy. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 452.

ILLITERAL. * adj. [in and literal.] Not literal.

Descending under the earth, is a translation most of all unexact and illiteral.

Dr. Dawson, Texts on the Logos, §c. 1765, p. 251.

ILLITERATE. † adj. [illiteratus, Lat.]

1. Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science: applied to persons.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Wotton.

The illiterate writer, empirick like, applies To minds diseases'd unsafe chance remedies:

The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,

Studies with care th' anatomy of man;

Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,

And fame from science, not from fortune draws.

Dryden.

In the first ages of Christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate, embraced torments and death.

Tillotson.

2. Unlearned; rude; barbarous; applied to things.

There are in many places heresy, and blasphemy, and impertinency, and illiterate rudenesses.

Bp. Taylor on Extremepore Prayer.

ILLITERATENESS. n. s. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chynistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. † n. s. [in and literature.] Want of learning.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

They, who in their present illiterature were so prone to sedition,—would be much more so if beaten by bookish speculations.

L. Addison, West Barbury, (1671.), Pref.
 If the historian intended hereby to arraign the abbots of illiterature.

H. Warton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, p. 63.

ILL-LIVED. * adj. [ill and live.] Leading a wicked life.

How too like is this crackt bell to a scandalous and ill-lived teacher! His calling is honourable, his noise is heard far enough; but the flaw, which is noted in his life, mars his doctrine, and offends those ears which else would take pleasure in his teaching. Bp. Hall, Occas. Meidt. § 56.

ILLNATURE. n. s. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good-will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominate a person ill-natured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnature'd task refuse; Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news.

Addison, Ovid.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors.

Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase, Rich foreign mold on their illnature'd land Induce. Philips.

ILLNATUREDLY. adv. [from illnatured.] In a peevish, froward manner.

ILLNATUREDNESS. n. s. [from illnatured.] Want of a kindly disposition.

ILLNESS. n. s. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament.

Atterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great; Art not without ambition; but without The illness should attend it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.]

1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderson so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Walton.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason.

Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Decay of Piety.

ILLOGICALLY. † adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

The arguments, which bear hardest upon Socinus, are such as are taken from those Scriptures, which, beyond all possibility of rational contradiction, declare the pre-existence and precedent being of Christ to his conception, such as John, viii. 58. "Glorify me, O Father, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was;" which all the Socinians in the world could never yet give any clear, proper, and natural exposition of; but unnaturally and illogically pervert and distort them, in defiance of sense, and reason, and all the received ways of interpretation.

South, Serm. iii. 259.

ILLOGICALNESS.* n. s. [from illogical.] Contrariety to the rules of reason.

The illogicalness of the inference.

Hammond, Works, iv. 546.

ILL-STARRED.* adj. [ill and star.] Influenced by evil stars with respect to fortune; unlucky.

O, ill-star'd lovers! what avails it me
To have thy love? 't have mine, what boots it thee?
Fanshau, Tr. of Pastor Fido.

Ill-star'd birds, that listening, not admirr'd.
Shenstone, Eleg. 6.

To ILLU'DE† v. a. [illuder, Fr. illudo, Lat.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes atwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed off his blow, 't illude him with such bait.

Spenser, F. Q.

If the solitariness of these rocks do not illude me.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 1.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
While its circumference, scorned to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought.

Prior.

To ILLU'ME v. a. [illuminer, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When you same star, that's westward from the pole

Had made his course, 't illumine that part of heav'n,
Where now it burns.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow,

Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach

Be tokens.

Thomson, Summer.

To ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminer, Fr. lumen, Lat.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
To illuminate my dim and dull'd eye.

Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light.

Wotton.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heaven,
To illuminate the earth and rule the night.

Milton, P. L.

Reason our guide, what can she more rely
Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day?

Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures.

Sandys, Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural.

Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples.

Watts.

ILLUMINATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Enlightened.

That famous and truly illuminate doctor, Francis Junius, the glory of Leyden.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 7.

A precise, pure, illuminate brother!

B. Jonson, Foz.

He hath an understanding so illuminate, as he is like to prove the best scholar of all his brethren.

Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 96.

ILLUMINATE.* n. s. One pretending to be enlightened with superior knowledge; as certain hereticks of the sixteenth century, called illuminati, affected to be; and as other fanciful persons, the heretical philosophers, called Rosicrucians, were sometimes denominated. In our own times, we have had illuminati, so calling themselves, assembling, in several parts of Europe, to promote plans against religion and social order; and endeavouring, by every method, to seduce the poor and the ignorant, as well as the rich and learned, into their secret machinations. England soon discovered, that these mock philosophers offered a stone instead of bread, and darkness visible instead of one cheering ray of light. Their execrable labours have been here exposed to detestation and contempt; but Europe yet mourns over the misery and ruin which those labours have occasioned. It is remarkable, that illuminate, as a noun substantive, in our language, is very old in a sense of contempt or reprehension; implying, that those who assumed the name, took too much upon them.

Another pestilent sect there was, not long since, of illuminati in Arragon, whose founders were a hypocritical crew of their priests; who, affecting in themselves and their followers a certain angelical purity, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

These new illuminates have such cogging shifts with them.

Watson, Quodlibets of State, (1602,) p. 44.

Not unlike the refined and quaint illuminates of our time. Loe, Blisse of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 15.

Such illuminates are our classical brethren!

Moutague, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 16.

ILLUMINATI.* [Latin.] See the substantive ILLUMINATE.

ILLUMINATION. n. s. [illuminatio, Latin; illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illightened, and an illumination created.

Raleigh, Hist.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
And windows with illuminations grac'd.

Dryden, Pers.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work.

Felton on the Classics.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired.

Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses.

Bacon.

No flōly passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace.

Sprat, Serm.

ILLUMINATIVE. adj. [illuminatif, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air.

Digby on Bodies.

ILLUMINATOR.† n. s. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

Chaucer, writing his poesies in English, is of some called the first illuminator of the English tongue.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work.

Felton.

To ILLUMINE† v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

His understanding was illuminated with the beams of divine truth.

Price, Prince Henry's Anniver. (1613,) p. 12.

To confirm his words, outflaw

Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs

Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze

Far round illumin'd hell.

Milton, P. L.

What in me is dark,

Illumine! what is low, raise and support!

Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;

O let my country's friends illumine mine.

Pope.

ILLUSION. n. s. [illusio, Latin; illusion, French.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, distill'd by magic flights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.

Shaks. Mac.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion.

Bacon, Hen. VII

So oft they fell

Into the same illusion; not as man,

Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton, P. L.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion.

Atterbury.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation.

Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;

Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise!

Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries.

Pope.

ILLUSIVE. adj. [from illusus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express.

Blackmore.

While the fond soul

Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints the illusive form.

Thomson, Spring.

ILLUSIVELY.* adv. [from illusive.] In a deceptive manner.

ILLUSIVENESS.* n. s. [from illusive.] Deception; false appearance.

Ash.

ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and usorius,
Lat. illusoire, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtlety, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue; a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance.

Locke.

To ILLUSTRATE,† v. a. [illustrare, Lat. illustrare, Fr.]

1. To brighten with light.

Then let us borrow from the glorious sun
A little light to illustrate this act.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 7.
Being illustrated by the sun, it [the front of the house] might yield the more graceful aspect.

Wotton on Architecture.

2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they set all regal power
Given me to quell their pride.

Milton, P. L.
These she enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authors take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth.

Brown.

ILLUSTRATION. n. s. [illustration, Fr. from illustrare.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem.

L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration.

Locke.

ILLUSTRATIVE,† adj. [from illustrare.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes onto the people.

Brown.

Purging and pruning with all industry,
What's dead or useless, less demonstrative,
What's dull or flaccid, nought illustrative.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 41.

We should suppose this also an additional illustrative note.

Biblioth. Bibl. Oxf. i. 47.

ILLUSTRATIVELY, adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

ILLUSTRATOR,* n. s. [Latin; illustrator, Fr.] One who illustrates, brightens, clears, or beautifies.

Cotgrave.

The right gracious illustrator of virtue.

Chapman, Sonnets at the end of his Homer.

ILLUSTRIOUS,† adj. [illustris, Latin, illustre, Fr. And our own word was at first illustre. "You may be an ornament to that illustre family." Lett. in 1566. Sidney State-Pap. vol. i. p. 9.]

1. Bright; shining.

Shaking his illustrious tresses,

Sandys, Ovid. B. 2.

His locks behind,
Illustrious on his shoulders fledge with wings,
Lay waving round.

Milton, P. L.

2. Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred.

South.

Of every nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have cheated into fame.

Dryden, Juv.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY, adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdained not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity.

Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost.

Pope.

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS, n. s. [from illustrious.]

Eminence; nobility; grandeur,

ILLUXURIOUS,* adj. [in and luxurious.] Not luxurious.

The widow Vanhomrigh and her two daughters quitted the illuxurious soil of their native country, for the more elegant pleasures of the English court.

Ld. Orrery on Swift, p. 104.

ILL-WILL,* n. s. [ill and will.] Disposition to envy or hatred.

Thereby he may gather

The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

Ros. Why look you so upon me?

Phob. For no ill-will I bear you.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

ILL-WILLER,* n. s. One who wishes or intends ill to another.

If I were a man, I would fight for you; sure you have some ill-willers; I would slay them.

Beaumont and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

Having usually many ill-willers, many disaffected malecontents.

Barrow, Works, i. 93.

I'M. Contracted from I am.

IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE. n. s. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription?

St. Matt. xxii. 20.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking.

Shakespeare.

Thy brother I,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb.

Shaksps.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion.

South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;

But your late brother did not prize me less,

Because I could not boast of images.

Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house.

2 Chron. xxxiii. 7.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,

To bear his image and renew his glories!

Shaksps.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,

And liv'd by looking on his images:

But now two mirrors of his princely semblance

Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

He made us to his image all agree:

That image is the soul, and that must be,

Or not the maker's image, or be free.

Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,

The images of revolt.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed;

The image of a wicked heinous fault

Lives in his eye.

Shakespeare, K. John.

The face of things a frightful image bears,

And present death in various forms appears.

Dryden, Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest

I'll shew you here at large.

Shakspeare.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive

Image of aught delightful, soft, or great?

Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles,

we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles.

Watts.

IMAGE-WORSHIP,* n. s. The worship of images or idols.

They are endeavouring to make proselytes, who are startled at image-worship.

Trapp, Papery truly stated, P. i.

In 787 another council met at Constantinople first, and was afterwards translated to Nice, in which the decree of the former synod was exploded, and image-worship first established in the church. This council was called, by the empress Irene, a bigotted image-worshipper.

Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

To IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion?

Dryden.

Image to thy mind

How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick.

Philips.

His ear oft shuddered with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd.

Prior.

Fate some future bard shall join

In sad similitude of griefs to mine,

Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,

And image charms he must behold no more.

Pope.

IMAGERY,† n. s. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut

An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery.

Spenser, F. Q.

When in those oratories might you see

Rich carvings, portraits, and imagery;

Where every figure to the life express'd

The godhead's pow'r.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

Your gift shall two large goblets be

Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,

And high emboss'd.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Show; appearance.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery.

Bp. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?

Secluded from the world, and all its care,

Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear.

Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear.

Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholic fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality.

Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery.

Dryden.

5. Form; make.

They are our brethren, and pieces of the same imagery with ourselves.

Feltham, Res. ii. 53.

IMA'GINABLE, adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imaginer.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem.

South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity.

Tillotson.

IMA'GINANT, adj. [imaginant, Fr.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body.

Bacon.

IMA'GINANT,* n. s. One who is prone to form strange ideas.

Fascination is the power and act of imagination, intensive upon other bodies, than the body of the imaginant.

Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

The air of common report, or the single testimony of some superstitious and melancholy imaginant. Spenser on Prodiges, (1665), p. 223.

IMA'GINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imaginer.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.
Shakespeare.

Expectation whirls me round;
The imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures?
Addison, Cato.

IMAGINA'TION. n. s. [imaginatio, Latin, imagination, Fr. from imaginer.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present; for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away.

2. Conception; image of the mind; idea. Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginings; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginings,
They often feel a world of restless cares.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginings, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

His imaginings were often as just as they were bold and strong.

3. Contrivance; scheme. Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginings against me.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion. We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imaginer.] Fantackish; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oftimes they do that which they do not.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, Fr.; imaginar, Lat.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bringing thee, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition?

2. To scheme; to contrive. They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device.

IMA'GNER. n. s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think.

IMA'GINING.* n. s. [from imagine.] Fancy; imagination.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings.

To IMBA'LM.* See TO EMBALM.

IMBA'RG.* See EMBARGO.

IMBA'RMEN.* n. s. Bar or opposition. See TO EMBAR.

Only her povertie was the maine imbarment of her marriage.

To IMBA'RK.* See TO EMBARK.

To IMBA'RN.* v. a. [from barn.] To lay up in a barn.

If a farmer hath both a fair harvest, and that also well in and imbarnd, and continuing safe there, yet if God give him not the grace to use and utter this well, all his advantages are to his loss.

To IMBA'SE.* v. a. To debase. See TO EMBASE.

They that imbase coin and metals, and obtrude them for perfect and natural.

To IMBA'SE.* v. n. To sink in value.

The books of the learned themselves, by ambitiously heaping up the conceits and authorities of other men, increase much in the bulk, but do as much imbase in true value.

To IMBA'STARDIZE.* v. a. [from bastardize.] To convict of being a bastard, or degenerate.

The rest, imbastardized from the ancient nobleness of their ancestors, are ready to fall flat.

To IMBA'THE.* v. a. [from bathe.] To bathe all over. Not of Milton's coinage, as I long since had an opportunity of proving.

Fear had taught to barre
Hot kisses from desire to press too farre,
To imbathe themselves.

Tusso's Aminta Engl. (1628.) A. i. S. I.
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers, strew'd with asphodel.

Methinks a sovran and reviving joy must needs rush into the bosom of him that reads or hears, and the sweet odour of the returning gospel imbathe his soul with the fragraney of Heaven.

IMBE'CILE.† adj. [imbecillis, Lat.; imbecille, Fr.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

We were, in respect to God, imbecile and lost.

To IMBE'CILE.† v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle. Dr. Johnson.—This is not the fact.

Embezzle, or imbezzle, is formed from a very different word. See TO EMBEZZLE. Our old lexicography defines "to imbesil, to purloin," but not to weaken. See Bullokar's Expositor. Bishop Jeremy Taylor uses the verb before us, imbecile, simply in the sense of weaken, without any allusion to injustice, which Dr. Johnson affixes to it in the example from that great man's "Holy Living;" but a second from his "Holy Dying" will prove what I assert.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations; simply, to weaken.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled.

It is a sad calamity, that the fear of death should so imbecill man's courage and understanding.

To IMBE'CILITATE.* v. a. [from imbecility.] To weaken; to render feeble.

The man, being skilful in natural magick, did use all the artifices his subtilty could devise to imbecillitate the earl.

IMBE'CILITY. n. s. [imbecillité, Fr.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked.

Strength would be lord of imbecility.
And the rude son would strike his father dead.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him.

IMBE'DDED.* See EMBEDED.

A number of glands imbedded in the cellular substance.

IMBE'LLICK.* adj. [in and bellicus, Latin.] Not warlike. See BELLIC.

The imbellick peasant, when he comes first to the field, shakes at the report of a musket.

To IMBE'ZZLE.* v. a. To steal; to purloin; to take from. See TO EMBEZZLE.

He could, by his providence, preserve the books so written from being imbezzled or corrupted.

IMBE'ZZLEMENT.* n. s. Theft. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

I must require you to use diligence in presenting specially those purloinings and imbezzlements, which are of plate, vessels, or whatsoever within the king's house.

To IMBI'BE.† v. a. [imbibo, Lat.; imbiber, Fr.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt.

The torrent merciless imbibes,
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.

Illumin'd wide

The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun.

Thomson, Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises.

Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom.

Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them.

*Watts, Improv. of the Mind.*3. To drench; to saturate; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave translates the French imbibé into "imbued, moistened, soaked, or drunk in." But see To IMBUE.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallic salt.

Newton.

IMBI'BER. n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams.

Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. s. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation.

Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all maledaction there is required an imbibition.

Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected.

Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which im-bitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community.

Addison, Freeh.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame?

South.

3. To exasperate.

IMBITTERER. n. s. [from the verb.] That which makes bitter.

The fear of death has always been considered as the greatest enemy of human quiet, the polluter of the feast of happiness, and the imbitterer of the cup of joy.

Johnson in Taylor's Sermon.

To IMBLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.] To adorn with figures of heraldry. See To EMBLAZON.

To describe races and games,

Or tilting furniture, imblazon'd shields.

Milton, P. L.

IMBLAZONRY. v. a. See EMBLAZONRY.

To IMBODDY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals

An heavenly form embodied, and array'd
With robes of light.

Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet it is more than our imbodyed souls can bear without lassitude.

Glanville, Scopsis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbodyed yours,

That she which marries you must marry me.

Shakespeare.

Never since created, man

Met such imbodyed force, as nam'd with these,

Could merit more than that small infantry

Warr'd on by cranes.

Milton, P. L.

Under their head imbodyed all in one.

Milton, P. L.

Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbodyed from the Sabine land.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodyed in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To IMBODDY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodyes and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being.

Milton, Comus.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow today, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one.

Locke.

To IMBOIL. v. n. [from boil.] To exestuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not now in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold.

Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:

Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy.

Shakespeare, Timon.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion,

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his.

Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay.

Dryden, Æn.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms.

Swift.

IMBONITY. n. s. [in and bonitas, Lat.]

Want of goodness. See BONITY.

All fears, griefs, suspicions, discontents, imbonities, insuavities are swallowed up and drowned in this Euripus, this Irish sea.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 215.

To IMBORDER. v. a. [from border.] To terminate; to bound.

Thick-woven arborets, and flowers

Imborder'd on each bank.

Milton, P. L.

To IMBOSK. v. n. [imboscare, Ital. "to enter a wood, to lay in ambush, to take shelter as a deer doth." Florio, 1598.] To lie concealed.

They seek the dark, the bushy, the tangled forest; they would imbosk.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

To IMBOSK. v. a. [See the neuter verb.] To conceal; to hide.

Requesting him to depart, and imbosk himself in the mountain, which was very near.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. fol. 46. b.

To IMBOSS. v. a. See To EMBOSS.

To IMBOSSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,

By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son.

Milton, P. L.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,

And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd.

Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,

Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurs'd.

Sidney.

Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,

Did all she might, more plainly to appear.

Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBOUND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,

Which was imbound in thisauteous clay.

Shakespeare.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] The word at first was embow. See what is noticed, in respect to the orthography, in EMBOW.] To arch; to vault.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off.

Bacon.

To IMBOWEL. v. a. See To EMBOWEL. Donne writes it imbowel.

To IMBOWER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

You whom highest heaven imbowers,

Praise the Lord with all your powers.

Sandys, Ps. cxlvii.

A shady bank,

Thick over-head with verdant roof imbower'd.

Milton, P. L.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbowering walks,

In spotless peace retir'd.

Thomson.

To IMBOWER. v. n. See To EMBOWER.

IMBOWMENT. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To IMBOX. v. a. [emboister, emboiter, Fr. whence to emboss, for embox, in the sense of enclose. See the third sense of EMBOSS.] To shut or close up as in a box.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To IMBRAID. v. a. [See To EMBRAID.]

To upbraid. Obsolete.

Huloet.

To IMBRANGLE. v. a. To entangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats

They're catch'd in knotted law like nets;

In which, when once they are imbrangled,

The more they stir, the more they're tangled.

Hudibras.

IMBRE'D. v. a. [from imbred.] Generated within. See To IMBRED.

To be wise, that is, to search the truth, is a disposition imbred in every man.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 288.

To IMBREED. v. a. [in and breed.] To generate within; to imbreed; to produce.

These Jesuits endeavour by all means to imbrode that fierceness and obstinacy in their scholars.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. H. 3. b.

IMBRICATE.* adj. [imbricatus, from imbrex, Latin.] Laid one under another.

Two rows on each side of the belly consist of larger scales, ovate and imbricate.

Russell, Acc. of Indian Serpents, p. 7.

IMBRICATED. adj. [imbricatus, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. s. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries.

Derham.

To IMBROWN.† v. a. [Ital. imbrunir.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote

The open field, and where the unpiere'd shade

The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd.

And in thy pocket ginging halfpence sound. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear

Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands.

Pope.

To IMBRUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with in or em. I have here sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embrued,

And by thy cruel darts to thee subdued. Spenser.

There streams a spring of blood so fast

From those deep wounds, as all embrued the face

Of that accursed caiff. Daniel, Civil Wars.

The merciles Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knales, Hist.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue.

Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,

That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood.

Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are embrued,

Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

There, where two ways in equal parts divide,

The direful monster from afar descri'd

Two bleeding babes depending at her side;

Whose panting vitals, warn with life, she draws,

And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins embrued;

The murder fell, and blood aton'd for blood.

Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue

The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips.

Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBRUTE.† v. a. [from brute. Ital. imbrutare.] To degrade to brutality.

We find how far natural corruption, improved with ignorance and want of education or religion, can imbrute the manners of men.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

I, who erst contended

With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd

Into a beast, and mix'd with beastial slime,

This essence to incarnate and imbrute.

Milton, P. L.

To IMBRUTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being.

Milton, Comus.

To IMBUE.† v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adjective is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

Her face with blushing shamefacedness imbued.

Sandys, Ovid, B. i.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles.

Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour.

Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tintured with the colour.

Woodward.

To IMBURSE.† v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French. The word is old in our lexicography; and Sherwood defines it "to purse up."

IME.* n. s. [Su. Goth. imm, ime, vapor; Sax. hýmpe.] Rime. Used in this sense in the Craven Dialect.

IMITABILITY. n. s. [imitabilis, Latin.]

The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imitable, Fr.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history.

Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers.

Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would caress some stable-man of note,

And imitate his language and his coat.

Bramston, Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden, Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. s. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, Fr.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, Man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,

Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. s. [Lat.; imateur, French.]

One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dryden.

IMITATORSHIP.* n. s. [from imitator.]

The office or employment of an imitator.

My soul adores judicial scholarship;
But when to service imitatorship

Some spruce Athenian pen is prentized,

'Tis worse than apish.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. iii. 9.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat.; immaculé, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ.

Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.

The king, whom catholics count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure

From other guilts as that, Heaven did not hold

One more immaculate. Denham, Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,

Hath had his current and defil'd himself.

Shakspere, Rich. II.

IMMACULATELY.* adv. [from immaculate.]

Without blemish; purely.

IMMACULATENESS.* n. s. [from immaculate.] Purity; innocence.

Candour and *immaculate*ness of conversation.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 140.

IMMAIL.* adj. [from mail.] Wearing mail or armour.

Swarms

Of men immail'd.

Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 4.

IMMAILLEABLE.* adj. [in and malleus, a hammer, Latin.] Not to be wrought upon; not to be impressed.

Oh the stiffness of a Romish zeal! how im-malleable does it render their stony natures to the force of all humane impressions!

Memoirs of Sir Edmonbury Godfrey, (1682.) p. 79.

To IMMANACLE. v. a. [from manacle.]

To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind

With all thy charms, although this corporal rind

Thou hast immanacled. Milton, Comus.

IMMANE.† adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of the word, and gives no example. It is, by our old writers, often coupled with cruelty, to denote excessive or monstrous cruelty; and Cockeram defines immane, cruel, wild. See also IMMANELY.

Doth it not appertain to the just judgement of God to avenge such immane cruelties?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 179.

Those immane cruelties, which divers have exercised upon men's dead bodies.

Fotherby, Atheism, (1622,) p. 207.

Immane Arcturus, weeping Pleiades, Orion, who with storms plows up the seas.

Sandys, Job, p. 15.

What immane difference is there between the twenty-fourth of February, and commencement of March?

Evelyn, B. i. ch. 17. § 3.

IMMANELY.* adv. [from immane.] Monstrously; cruelly.

They have not done the same by the power of miracles and integrity of life, but only by dint of sword, which did so immanely and barbarously make havock of them, to the destruction of some millions.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 178.

A man of excessive strength, valiant, liberal, and fair of aspect, but immanely cruel.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. i.

IMMANENCY.* n. s. [in and maneo, Lat.] Internal dwelling.

The immanency and inherency of this power in Jesus is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, Fr.; in and maneo, Lat.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us.

Glanville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God.

South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMANITY.† n. s. [immanitas, Lat.; immanité, Fr.] A word very common in Shakspeare's time, and since; but Dr. Johnson has no other example than the single one from Shakspeare; and the commentators on the poet, explaining its meaning, have yet left it unsupported by any other instance.† Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural, That such immanity and bloody strife Should reign among professors of one faith.

Shakspeare.

Maximinus, for the immanity of his mind and doings, was usually termed Cyclops, Busris, Phalaris, Typhon.

Dean King, Sermon, 5 Nov. 1608, p. 25.

We shall be then most assured to taste of their fierce immanities. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 138. A belluine kind of immanity never ranged so among men.

Howell, Lett., iii. 15.

The poet brings in his goddess blaming the rusticks for their immanity.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 833.

IMMARCESSIBLE.† adj. [in and marcesco, Latin; immarcescible, old Fr. Cotgrave, and Roquefort.] Unfading.

So minister discipline, that you forget not mercy; that when the Chief Shepherd shall come, you may receive the immarcescible crown of glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Form of Consecr. of Bishops, (1629).

This crown, which Thou hast laid up for me, is immarcescible.

By. Hall, Med. of the Love of Christ, § 11.

They were inflamed with the desire of enlarging the kingdom of Christ here, and of obtaining that immarcescible crown hereafter.

More on the Seven Churches, ch. 3.

If the prize which we expect in the race of our imperfect obedience be an immarcescible crown.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

Not for a garland of flowers, but for wreaths of immarcescible glory.

Hallywell, Melanyp. p. 105.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My powers are unlit, Myself immartial.

Chapman, Odyssey.

To IMMASK.† v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

With thy deity

Shade and immask the errors of my pen.

Marston, Pigm. Image, Addr. to Good Opin. (1598).

IMMATCHABLE.* adj. [in and matchable.]

Not matchable; peerless.

Where learned More and Gardiner I met,

Men in those times immatchable for wit.

Mir. for Mag. p. 530.

IMMATERIALLY. adj. [immatériel, Fr. in and materia, Lat.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever do dwell.

Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone, Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;

So hath she not a body of her own,

But is a spirit and immaterial mind.

Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected. Dr. Johnson.—This censure is questionable, when the second sense of material is considered; to which this is opposed. See MATERIAL.

IMMATERIALLY.† n. s. [from immaterial.]

Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

There are sicknesses that walk in darkness, and there are exterminating angels that fly wrapt up in the curtains of immateriality.

By. Taylor, Funer. Sermon on the Count. of Carbery.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality.

Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMATERIALIST.* n. s. [from immaterial.]

One who professes immateriality.

Dr. George Berkeley became founder of a sect, called immaterialists. Swift, Lett. to Ld. Carteret.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Lat.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude.

Glanville, Scepis.

IMMATERIALLY. n. s. [from immaterial.]

Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE.† adj. [in and materia, Lat.] Not consisting of matter: incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few.

Bacon.

After a long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less materiate; such as this of sounds.

Bacon.

Philo makes all immaterial beings to be created in this first day. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 144.

IMMATUR.† adj. [immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.

Immature or unripe hopes.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 529.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprise of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them.

Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,

For partial favour, and permitted hate:

Let now your immature dissension cease,

Sit quiet.

Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

How were we affected here in England for prince Henry's immature death!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 163.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives till seventy.

By. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

IMMATUR.† adv. [from immature.]

Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

They ripen though you crop them immaturely.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 933.

Had not his thread of life been immaturely cut, he might have surpassed the age of any of his royal ancestors.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 110.

Must noble Hastings immaturely die?

Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

IMMATUR.† n. s. [from immature.]

IMMATURITY.† n. s. Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

In state, many things at first are crude and hard to digest, which time and deliberation can supple and concoct: but in religion, wherein is no immaturity, nothing out of season, it goes far otherwise.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgement.

Glanville.

IMMEABLY. n. s. [immeabilis, Lat.]

Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

3 H

From this pligm proceed wide cold tumours, viscosity, and consequently immeasurability of the juices. Arbutnot.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.

Milton, P. L.
Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean.

Milton, S. A.
What a glorious show are those beings entertained with that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether?

Addison, Guardian.
Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut the immeasurable way.

Pope, Odyssey.
IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.
The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead.

Spenser.
There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey.

Milton, P. L.
IMMEASURED.* adj. [in and measure.] Exceeding common measure.

Geaunts, and such dreadful wights,
As far exceed men in their immeasur'd mights.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 8.
IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature.

Cheyme.
Nothing will clear a head possessed with immechanical notions.

Mead.
IMMEDIACY. n. s. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependence. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakespeare.

He led our powers,
Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with regard to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is not to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakespeare, Timon.
Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
By some immediate stroke. Milton, P. L.

But she, howe'er, of victory sure,
Contented the wreathe too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate power,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton
Immediately to marry.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
IMMEDIATENESS. n. s. [from immediate.]

1. Presence with regard to time.
2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMMEDICABLE. † adj. [immedicabile, French; immedicabilis, Latin.] Not to be healed; incurable.

For which immedicabile blow,
Due to that time, me dooming heaven ordain'd,
Wherein confusion absolutely reign'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 522.
Wherein had concurred such abundance of malignant humours, that it might truly be said, it was immedicabile.

Tr. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 136.
My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicabile,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton, S. A.

IMMELODIOUS.* adj. [in and melodious.] Not melodious; unmusical.

My lute be as thou wast, when thou didst grow
With thy green mother in some shady grove,
When imelodious winds but made thee move.

Drummond, Sonnet to his Lute.
IMMEMORABLE. † adj. [immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering; unworthy of remembrance.

Huotet, and Bullokar.
IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, Fr.; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMMEMORIALITY.* adv. [from immemorial.] Beyond memory.

Both word and thing being immemorially known in Greece. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, Fr. immensus, Lat.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce!

Milton, P. L.
As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass. Bentley.

IMMENSENESS.* n. s. [from immense.] Unbounded greatness.

The immenseness of whose excellencies [is] too highly raised for us. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 43.
The immenseness of the victory, and the consequences that might have attended it.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 512.

IMMENSITY. n. s. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are suns, are centers. Blackmore, Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. s. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. † adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.
One God of immensurable majesty.

Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. (1652), p. 906.
IMMENSURATE.* adj. [in and mensuratus, Lat.] Unmeasured.

It fell into an immensurate distance from it.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654), p. 168.

TO IMMERGE. † v. a. [immergo, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

Their heads are gross, their souls are immerged in matter, and drowned in the moistures of an unwholesome cloud.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653), p. 208.

IMMERIT. n. s. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

IMMERITED.* adj. [Lat. immeritus.] Not deserved.

Those, on whom I have in the plenteouset manner showered my bounty, and immerited favour, have dated on me.

King Charles in the Princely Pelican, p. 279.

IMMERITOUS.* adj. [Latin, immeritus.] Undeserving; of no value.

A frothy, immerited, and undeserving discourse. Milton, Colasterion.

TO IMMERSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood
More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immerged in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immerged in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison, Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMMERSE. adj. [immersus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERSION. † n. s. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison, Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

If it were true, that all the swallows which inhabit a country, plunge into the water or mud annually in October, and rise from their subaqueous bed in the following April; there must have been frequent opportunities of observing them, either in the instant of their immersion, or what is much more curious, in the moment of their emersion, or during their long repose at the bottom of the pool. Tr. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their fusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

It was the Platonic doctrine, that humane souls or minds descended from above, and were sowed in generation, that they were stunned, stupefied, and intoxicated by this descent and immersion into animal nature. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 513.

IMMETHODED.  adj.* [in and method.]

Not having method; without regularity.

Their sudden thoughts, immethode'd discourses, and slovenly sermoneans.

IMMETHODOICAL. † adj. [in and methodical.]

Rude, harsh, immethodeal.

The unskilful and immethodeal teaching of their pastor.

Milton, Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

The nature of their work required, that they should first begin with immethodeal collections, and indigested experiments, before they go on to finish and compose them into arts.

Sprat, Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 319.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodeal author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODOICALLY. † adv. [from immethodeal.] Without method; without order.

The Spirit of God sets down nothing immethodeally, nor in vain.

More on the Seven Churches, p. 12.

IMMETHODOICALNESS.  n. s.* [from immethodeal.] Want of method or order; confusion.

To IMMEW.* v. a. To mew or coop up; to confine. See To EMMEW.

My soul is free as ambient air,
Although my baser part's immew'd;
Whilst loyal thoughts do still repair
To accompany my solitude.

Song in Lloyd's Memoirs, (1668,) p. 96.

To IMMIGRATE.* v. n. [Lat. immigro.]

To enter or pass into; to go to dwell in some place. Cockeram.

They immigrate into the wishes they utter.

Novels, &c. (1668,) p. 67.

IMMIGRATION.* n. s. [Lat. immigratio.]

An entering or passing into a place.

Hitherto I have considered the Saracens either at their immigration into Spain about the ninth century, or at the time of the crusades, as the first authors of romantic fabling among the Europeans.

Watson, Hist. E. P. vol. i. sign. C. 3. b.

The immigrations of the Arabians into Europe, and the crusades, produced numberless accounts, partly true and partly fabulous, of the wonders seen in the eastern countries. Ibid. p. 101.

IMMINENCE. † n. s. [from imminent.]

Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. A word not in use, Dr. Johnson says. Formerly it was imminency, as in the enlarged Expositor of Bullokar; and perhaps is not yet disused.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all imminence, that gods and men Address their dangers in. Shaks. Troil. and Cres.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, Fr. imminens, Lat.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.

These she applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

To them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgements imminent.

Men could not sail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

To IMMINGLE.* v. a. [in and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immingle charms.

Thomson, Summer.

IMMINUTION. † n. s. [from imminuo, Lat.]

Diminution; decrease.

Without any addition, imminution, or alteration.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, p. 14.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. s. [from immiscible.]

Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.]

Not capable of being mingled.

Richardson, Clarissa.

IMMISSION. † n. s. [immissio, Latin.]

The act of sending in; contrary to emission.

To God must be ascribed these stirrings, these breakings; whether, by a just but efficacious permission, as sins; or by a just immission, as punishments. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 76.

Transient immissions, and representations of the ideas of things future to the imagination.

South, Sermon. iii. 416.
His immission of a pestilence upon the Grecians. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 101.

To IMMIT. † v. a. [immitto, Latin.] To send in; to inject.

But grant an entire efficacy to this balsamic liquor, [oil or juice of cedar,] thus clysterwise immitted into the intestines; yet — medicines, this way exhibited to the dead, immediately flow out again.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705,) p. 273.

IMMITIGABLE.* adj. [in and mitigo, Lat.]

Not to be softened.

Did she mitigate these immitigable, these iron-hearted men? Harris.

To IMMIX. † v. a. [in and mix.] To mingle.

Salt nitrous humours, which are immixed with the mass of the blood.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 341.

Reason — immixed and contempered with the soul. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

Samson, with these immix'd, inevitably Pall'd down the same destruction on himself. Milton.

IMMIXABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impossible to be mingled.

Fill a glass sphere with such liquors as may be clear, of the same colour, and immixable. Wilkins.

IMMIXT.* adj. [Lat. immixtus.] Unmixed. This seems to be an improper usage of the word; yet formerly was not thought so.

The most ancient and immixt people in the universe. Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 377.

It doth steady stand, all-uniform,
Pure, pervious, immixt, innocuous, mild.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

IMMOBILITY. n. s. [immobilité, French, from immobilis, Latin.] Unmovableness; want of motion; resistance to motion.

The course of fluids, through the vascular solids must in time harden the fibres, and abolish many of the canals; from whence driness, weakness, immobility, and debility of the vital force.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

IMMODERACY.* n. s. [from immoderate.]

Excess.

The strength of delight is in its seldomness or rarity, and stings in its satiety: mediocrity is its life, and immoderacy its confusion.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 1.

IMMODERATE. adj. [immoderatus, Lat.] Excessive; exceeding the due mean.

One means, very effectual for the preservation of health, is a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray on the Creation.

IMMODERATELY. adv. [from immoderate.]

In an excessive degree.

Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death. Shakspeare.

The heat weakened more and more the arch of the earth, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, drying it immoderately, and chapping it. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

IMMODERATENESS.* n. s. [from immoderate.] Want of moderation.

Doth Solomon speak this of honey's excess only, and not of immoderateness in general?

Sheffield, Learned Disc. p. 85.

Adversaries join together in reproaching us for this moderation; and, by their immoderateness in so doing, do also justify the moderation of our church. Fuller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 41.

IMMODERATION.† n. s. [immoderation, Fr. from immoderate.] Want of moderation; excess.

There was an immoderation and fault in anger.
Hammond, Pract. Catech. ii. § 6.

It may very well suit the immoderations of the times.
Gregory, Notes on Script. ch. 26.

Their sin proceeded from themselves; — and consists in the abuse of his fatherly indulgence by a wilful immoderation and excess.

Hallywell, Melampr. p. 10.

IMMODEST.† adj. [immodeste, Fr. in and modest.]

1. Wanting shame; wanting delicacy or chastity.

She railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her.
Shakspeare.

So dangerous a thing is an ignorant and indiscreet preacher, and a bold, immodest auditor.

More, Conj. Cabb. p. 225.

More immodest was the pretence of the dean of Norwich's conversion [to popery] about two years since.

The Missionaries' Arts Discovered, (1688,) p. 61.

2. Unchaste; impure.

Immodest deeds you hinder to be wrought;
But we proscrib the least immodest thought.

Dryden.

3. Obscene.

'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon, and learn'd; which, once attain'd,
Comes to no farther use
But to be known and hated. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Immodest words admit of no defence,
For want of decency is want of sense.

Roscommon.

4. Unreasonable; exorbitant; arrogant.

IMMODESTLY.† adv. [from immodest.] In a shameless or immodest manner.

He would have us live soberly; — not wantonly, not immodestly, not incontinently.

Woodton, Chr. Manual, (1376,) sign. L. iii. b.

These Corinthian women (conceding themselves, when they prayed or prophesied in the church, to be acting the part of se-priests, uttering oracles like the Pythia, or celebrating sacrifice as the Mænades or Bacchæ,) were so fond as to imitate; and accordingly cast off their veils, and discovered their faces immodestly in the congregation; and thereby (as the apostle speaks) dishonoured their heads.
Mede, Diatr. p. 259.

IMMODESTY.† n. s. [immodestie, Fr. from immodest.]

1. Want of delicacy; impudence.

I beseech your grace to assist us: or else the immodesty of his competitor will bear down this most honest and bashful creature.

Ld. Keeper Williams, in 1624, Cabala, p. 94.

I am thereby led into an immodesty of proclaiming another work, which I have long devoted to the service of my country.

Wotton on Architecture, Rem. p. 71.

IMMORALITY. n. s. [from immoral.] Dishonesty; want of virtue; contrariety to virtue.

Such men are put into the commission of the peace who encourage the grossest immoralities, to whom all the bawds of the ward pay contribution.
Swift.

IMMORIGEROUS.† adj. [immorigerus, Latin.] Rude; uncivil; disobedient.

Cockeram.

Such creatures as are immorigerous, we have found out expedients to reclaim.

Shuckhouse, Hist. of the Bib. i. 150.

IMMORIGEROUSNESS.† n. s. [from immorigerous.] Disobedience.

All degrees of delay are degrees of immorigerousness and unwillingness.

Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exemplar, p. 1.

IMMORTAL.† adj. [immortalis, Lat.]

1. Exempt from death; being never to die. To the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be glory for ever. 1 Tim. i. 17.

Her body sleeps in Capulet's monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives. Shakspeare.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal.

Abbott, Descript. of the World.

The Paphian queen,

With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed,
Taught by her wound that goddesses may bleed.
Wallers.

2. Never ending; perpetual.

Give me my robe, put on my crown: I have Immortal loungings in me. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleop.

IMMORTALITY. n. s. [immortalité, Fr. from immortal.]

1. Exemption from death; life never to end.

This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality. 1 Corinth. xv.

Quaff immortality and joy. Milton, P. L.

He the immortality of souls proclaim'd,
Whom th' oracle of men the wisest nam'd.

Denham.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God, and the nature of his immortality.
Cheyne.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality.
Watts.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

IMMORTALLY.† adv. [from the adjective.] So as never to die.

IMMORTALIZATION.† n. s. [from immortalize; Fr. immortalisation.] An immortalizing.
Cotgrave.

TO IMMORTALIZE.† v. a. [immortaliser, Fr. from immortal.]

1. To make immortal; to perpetuate; to exempt from death.

For mortal things desire their like to breed,

That so they may their kind immortalize.
Davies, Nosce Teipsum.

Muster not the want of issue among your great-est afficiouns, as those do, that cry, Give me children, or else my name dies; the poorest way of immortalizing that can be, and as natural to a cobbler as a prince. Osborne, Adv. to a Son, p. 70.

Christ is risen from the grave, having conquered death by dying; and is ascended into the pure and peaceable habitations of glory: Therefore all his members, who are united to Him in the inseparable bands of faith and love, shall feel the effects of his powerful life, in immortalizing their very bodies.
Hallywell, Saving of Souls, p. 103.

2. To exempt from oblivion.

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.
Shakspeare.

Revenge—by fresh returns of provocation brings in, what has in vain been attempted in nature, a kind of "perpetual motion" in malice, and immortalizes quarrels and contentions.

Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 185.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. n. To become immortal. This word is, I think, peculiar to Pope.

Fix the year precise,

When British bards begin to immortalize. Pope.

IMMORTALLY.† adv. [from immortal.] With exemption from death; without end.

There is your crown;

And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard you yours! Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

What pity 'tis that he cannot wallow immortally in his sensual pleasures!
Bentley.

IMMORTIFICATION.† n. s. [in and mortification.] Want of subjection of the passions.

It mingles violence with industry, and fury with zeal,—and violence with desires, and immortifications in all the appetites and prosecutions of the soul. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 134.

IMMOVABILITY.† n. s. [from immovable.]

Incapability of being removed.

IMMOVABLE.† adj. [in and movable.]

Us'd many soules in beastly bodies to immould.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. st. 49.

IMMU'ND.* adj. [immonde, Fr. immundus, Lat.] Unclean. Not now in use.

Through their own nastiness and sluttishness, immund, and sordid manner of life, they suffer their air to putrify, and themselves to be choaked up.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

IMMUNDICITY.* n. s. [Fr. immondicité.] Uncleaness; impurity.

Nor is there any moral immundicity of a more dangerous insinuation, than this of wanton discourse.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648, p. 138.

IMMUNITY.* n. s. [immunité. Fr. immunitas, Lat.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.

Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness. Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Silney.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. 1 Mac. xiii. 34.

The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Spral, Serin.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures.

But this annex'd condition of the crown, Immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.

TO IMMURE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emurer, old French, so that it might be written emurre.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls!

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
And shall I think in silver she's immur'd!

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long boat. Wotton.

Lysimachus immured it with a wall.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure
On earth, she, when escap'd, is wise and pure. Denham.

IMMURE. n. s. [from the verb.] A wall; an enclosure, as in Shakespeare, but perhaps no where else.

Their vow is made
To ransom Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps.

Shakespeare, ProL Tr. and Cress.

IMMU'SICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.
All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are never unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings.

We consider the immusical note of all swans ever beheld or heard of. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

IMMUTABILITY.* n. s. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilité, Fr. from immutable.] Exemption from change; invariableness; unchangeableness.

Lo, what delightful immutations
On her soft flowing vest we contemplate.

More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 23.

Strong and violent hath been the immutation which sudden joy hath wrought in the body.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 21.

TO IMMUTE.* v. a. [immuto, Lat.] To change; to alter.

God can immediately immutate, change, corrupt, destroy, or annihilate whatsoever pleaseth His divine majesty.

Salkeld, Treat. of Angels, (1613,) p. 106.

IMP.* n. s. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a sprig. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Steevens and Mr. Chalmers give the same etymon.

"But Mr. Steevens needed not to have travelled to Wales," says Mr. H. Tooke,

"for that which he might have found at home. Our language has absolutely nothing from the Welsh. Imp is the past participle of the Sax. impan, to plant, to graft," Div. of Parl. ii. 311.—

Without stopping to notice here the sweeping assertion as to the Welsh language, which will be considered in another part of this dictionary, I may add that the Germ. impfen, is also to graft; and that the earliest usage of our word, is in the sense of the shoot of a tree.]

1. A graft, scion, or sucker; "an imp, or young slip of a tree." Barret.

Of feeble trees there comen wretched imps.

Chaucer, Monk's ProL

Boughs, branches, twigs, young imps, sprays, and buds. Newton, Herbal to the Bible, 1587.

A toward imp, I call'd him home.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

3. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense it is still retained.

In this our age, the church of England is vexed with two horrible imps and messengers of our enemy Satan.

Anderson, Essay upon Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 28, b.

Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan.

The serpent — after long debate irresolute Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom To enter, and his dark suggestions hide From sharpest sight. Milton, P. L.

As soon as you can hear his knell,
This good on earth turns d — I in hell;
And, lo! his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.

4. An addition to a beehive. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

TO IMP.* v. a. [impio, to engraft, Welsh; impan, Sax. impfen, Germ.]

1. To plant; to graft. It was formerly also used as a verb neuter. Now wholly obsolete.

Thus taught and preschid hath Reson;
But Love yspille hath her sermon,
That was so impid in my thought,
That her doctrine I set at naught.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 5137.

Lesynges I imped,
Tyll they beare leaves of smooth speech.

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 22. b.

2. To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with adscititious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings.

Shakespeare.

This bird was hatched in the council of Lateran, fully plumed in the council of Trent, and now lately hath her feathers impied by the modern caustics.

Bp. Hall, Old Reliq. ch. 13. § 1.

New Rebellsions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp their serpent-wings.

Milton, Sonnet.

Help, ye tart satyrs to imp my rage
With all the scorpions that should whip this age.

Cleveland.

With cord and canvas from rich Hamburg sent,
His navy's molted wings he imps once more.

Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings.

Dryden.

The Mercury of heaven, with silver wings
Imp'd for the flight, to overtake his ghost.

Southern.

IMPACABLE.* adj. [Lat. impacatus.] Not to be softened or appeased.

Freed from bands of impacable fate,
And power of death, they live for aye above.

Spenser, Ruins of Time.

TO IMPACT.* v. a. [impactus, Lat.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together.

Woodward on Fossils.

To IMPA'INT. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shaksp.

To IMPA'IR. v. a. [empirer, to make worse, French, Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence. See To EMPAIR.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual.

Hooker.

Objects divine

Must needs impair and weary human sense.

Milton, P. L.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton, P. R.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt the approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years.

Pope.

To IMPA'IR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair quoth he, but reason can repair.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPA'IR.† n. s. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not now used.

The ladies think it a most desperate impair to their quickness of wit.

B. Jonson, Epicene.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by sight than dust of steel.

Brown.

IMPA'IR.† adj. [impar, Lat.] Unsuitable. Obsolete.

What he has, he gives, what thinks, he shews;
Yet gives he not till judgement guides his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Nor is it more important to an honest and absolute man.

Chapman, Tr. of the Shield of Homer, (1598.) Pref.

IMPA'IRER.† n. s. [from impair.] That which impairs.

Immoderate labour and immoderate study are equally the impairers of health.

Warburton.

IMPA'IRMENT.† n. s. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

Cold and moist are the qualities which work an impairment in the reasonable part.

Carew, Trial of Wits, (1594.)

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMPA'LATABLE.† adj. [in and palatable.] Not suitable to the palate; not pleasing to the taste; disagreeable.

To IMPA'LE.† See To EMPALE.

IMPA'LEMENT.† See EMPALEMENT.

To IMPA'LLID.† v. a. [from palidus, Lat.] To make pale.

It [Envy] is the green-sickness of the soul, that, feeding upon coals and pulling rubbish, impallids all the body to a hectic leanness.

Feltham, Res. ii. 56.

To IMPA'LM.† v. a. [empalmer, Fr.; in and palma, Lat.] To seize or take into the hand; to grasp. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPA'LPABLE.† n. s. [from impalpable.] The state or quality of not being perceived by touch.

He [pope Gregory the Great] and Eutychius, the patriarch of Constantinople, had a curious dispute, whether the bodies of the righteous, after the resurrection, should be solid, or thinner than the air? Gregory was for the palpability, and Eutychius for the impalpability; and the dispute ended, as it is to be supposed, in a grievous quarrel.

Jortin, Remarks on Ecc. Hist. vol. iii. p. 170.

(ed. 1805.)

IMPA'LPABLE.† adj. [impalpable, Fr. in and palpable.]

1. Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion.

Boyle.

2. Not coarse or gross.

His own religion from its simple and impalpable form was much less exposed to the ridicule of scenic exhibition.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 200.

IMPA'NATE.† adj. [impanatus, low Lat. from in and panis.] Embodied in bread. See IMPANATION.

This speech meaneth not that the body of Christ is impanate.

Alp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 369.

To IMPA'NATE.† v. a. [impanatus, low Lat.] To embody with bread.

If the elements really contain such immense treasures, what need have we to look up to the natural body above? or what have we to do but to look down to those impanated riches, to the elements ennobled with all graces and virtues, and replenished with that very divinity which makes the humanity so considerable?

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist. p. 64.

IMPANATION.† n. s. [impanation, Fr. from impanatus, low Lat.] A supposed subsistence of the body of Christ with the species of bread in the Lord's supper. See CONSUBSTANTIATION.

Forasmuch as he is joined to the bread but sacramentally, these followeth no impanation thereof; no more than the Holy Ghost is in aquate, that is to say, made of water, being sacramentally joynted to the water in baptism.

Alp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 368.

Some have imagined that our Lord's divinity becomes personally united with the elements, as well as with his own natural body, having in that sense two personal bodies. This conceit has sometimes gone under the name of "assumption," as it imports the Deity's assuming the elements into a personal union; and sometimes it has been called impanation, a name following the analogy of the word "incarnation."

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist. p. 34.

IMPA'NNEL.† See EMPANNEL.

To IMPA'RADISE.† v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadisad neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did overlook it.

Sidney, Arcad.

For there that soul imparadized lies.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. N. i. b.

O my bright lovely brooke, whose name doth bear the sound

Of God's first garden plot, the imparadized ground,

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 30.

All my souls be

Emparadis'd in you, in whom alone

I understand, and grow, and see.

Donne, Poems, p. 20.

Thus these two,

Imparadis'd in one another's arms,

The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill

Of bliss on bliss.

Milton, P. L.

IMPA'RALLED.† adj. [in and parallel.] Not to be paralleled; unmatched.

That this dear price should be paid for a little wild mirth, or gross and corporal pleasure, is a thing of such imparalleled folly, that if there were not too many instances before us, it might seem incredible.

Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 168.

IMPA'RDONABLE.† adj. [in and pardonable.] Irremissible.

Not that it is in its nature imardonable.

South, Sermon. x. 323.

IMPA'RITY.† n. s. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneity of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts.

Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies?

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Difference in degree either of rank or excellence.

He, who by the hand of his holy Apostle, founded this church of Crete in Titus, and his elders in a meet and decent imparity and subordination, would maintain his own ordinance amongst us also.

Alp. Sancroft's, Sermon. p. 54.

To IMPA'RK.† v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common. The orthography seems to be empark. See To EMPARK.

IMPA'RLANCE.† See EMPARLANCE.

To IMPART.† v. a. [impartir, old Fr. to give, Lacombe; impartio, Lat.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart.

Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,

When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had

Ran in my veins.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds.

Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts,

Wast wont, I mine to thee wast wont to impart.

Milton, P. L.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute.

Milton, P. L.

IMPA'RTIAL.† adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:

Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;

Love is impartial, and to both the same.

Dryden, Æn.

IMPA'RTIALIST.† n. s. [from impartial.]

One who is impartial.

I am professedly enough an impartialist.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 76.

IMPA'RTIALITY.† n. s. [impartialité, Fr.; from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgement; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPARTMENT.* n. s. [from impart.] Communication of knowledge; disclosure. Not in use.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.

Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try,
To found a path from hell to that new world.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSABLENESS.* n. s. [from impassable.] Incapability of admitting passage.

As no carts used to come here by reason of the impassableness of the boggy soil, it is a common proverb, That all the carts which come to Crowland were shod with silver.

Crutwell, Tour through Gt. Brit. (Lincolnshire).

IMPASSIBILITY.† n. s. [impassibilit , Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

These bodies of ours shall come out of their graves with all their parts entirely as they now are; altered indeed, I confess, in quality, in agility, in glory and splendour, in impassibility.

Hales, Rem. Serm. at the End, p. 22.
Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand.

IMPASSIBLE.† adj. [impassibilis, Fr. in and passio, Lat.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

This most pure part of the soul, and (as Aristotle sayeth) divine, impassible, and incorruptible, is named in Latin, "Intellectus."

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 201.
After Thy resurrection and knowledge of Thine impassible condition, it was not strange for them to talk of Thy kingdom.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.
If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour.

Hammond.
Secure of death I should condemn thy dart,
Though naked and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLENESS. n. s. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibleness of the next?

Decay of Chr. Piety.

To IMPASSION.†. v. a. [in and passion.] To move with passion; to affect strongly.

See TO EMPASSION. Milton's empassion'd, so given by Dr Johnson, should be impassion'd, as it is here, and not as an adjective, as Dr. Johnson has pronounced it.

So, standing, moving, or to highth upgrown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began.

Milton, P. L.
In the impassion'd man,
Concealing art with art, the poet sunk.

Thomson, Liberty, P. ii.

IMPASSIONATE.* adj.
1. Strongly affected. See EMPASSIONATE.

2. Without feeling; from passion.
A kind of stupidity or impassionate hurt.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 191.
These reproaches we may take coolly and calmly, as that Stoick philosopher did, who whilst he was discoursing of being free from passions, (it being the doctrine of that sect, that a wise man should be impassionate;) a rude fellow spat purposely in his face; and when he was asked, whether he were not angry, answered, No, truly, I am not angry, but I doubt whether I should not be angry at such an abuse: but there is a God that will not put up our contumelies so; we strike his servants on earth, and he feels it in heaven.

Bp. Hall, Rem, p. 123.
To IMPASSIONATE.* v. a. [from impassion.] To affect powerfully.

It is evident in the Gospel, that our Saviour Christ was one while deeply impassioned with sorrow. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 203.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes. She told him what those empty phantoms were, Forms without bodies, and impassive air.

Dryden,  n.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away;
And on the impassive ice the lightnings play.

Pope.
IMPASSIVENESS.* n. s. [from impassive.] The state of being impassive.

We find all those figurings of apathy and impassiveness to prove but coloured and fruitless conceptions.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 62.

IMPASTATION.* n. s. [from impaste.] A mixture of divers materials of different colours, and consistencies, baked or bound together with some cement, and hardened either by the air or fire.

Chambers.
To IMPASTE.†. v. a. [empaster, Fr.]

1. To knead or make into dough or paste; to paste; to concrete as into paste.

Horridly trick'd
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.
2. [In painting.] To lay on colours thick and bold.

IMPATIBLE.* adj. [impatibilis, Lat.] Intolerable; not to be borne. Cockram.

IMPATIENCE.† n. s. [impatience, Fr. impatientia, Lat.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The experiment I resolved to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion. Fie! how impatience lowereth in your face!

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness. No further with your din

Shakspeare, Cym.
Express impatience.
The longer I continued in this scene, the greater was my impatience of retiring from it. Hurd.

IMPATIENT.† adj. [impatient, Fr. impatiens, Lat.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain. The tortur'd savage turns around

And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion; with at before the occasion: with of, impatience is referred more to the thing; with at, to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

4. Hot; hasty. The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison, Spect.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty C sar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd power. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands.

Pope, Odyssey.

6. Not to be borne. Ay me! dear lady, which the ymage art

Of ruefull pity and impatient smart. Spensers, F. Q. ii. i. 44.

IMPATIENT.* n. s. One who is not able to bear pain; one who is violently agitated by passion.

I have heard and seen some ignorant impatiens, when they have found themselves to smart with God's scourge, cast a sullen frown back upon him, with Cur me C dis? Seasonable Serm. p. 39.

IMPATIENTLY.† adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness. Foaming at the mouth, impatiently he raves.

Drayton, Polygot. S. 18.

2. Passionately; ardently. He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration.

Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

IMPATRONIZATION.* n. s. [impatronisation, Fr. from impatronize.] An absolute mastery, seigniory, or possession of Cotgrave, and Sherwood. See TO IMPATRONIZE.

To IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any seigniory. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the duchy. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To IMPAWN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd,
Some surety for a safe return again.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To IMPE'ACH.† v. a. [empecher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use. Dr. Johnson. — Where used, by our old authors, it is most frequently and properly empeach. See To EMPEACH.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

Hayward.

A defluxion on my throat impeached my utterance.

Howell.

2. To accuse by public authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.

Addison.

Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached.

Swift.

3. To bring into question.

You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

IMPE'ACH.† n. s. Trial; accusation; not hindrance or impediment, as Dr. Johnson has defined it; for in the following example, which he cites, the speaker is trying a cause, as Mr. Nares has observed, and speaks of it as such: a very necessary correction, which till now had escaped me.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
If here you bous'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

Shakespeare.

IMPE'ACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.

Grew.

IMPE'ACHER. n. s. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.

Gov. of the Tongue.

IMPE'ACHMENT.† n. s. [empechement, Fr.]

1. Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. But it has always been used, as Mr. Ritson also has observed, in the same sense, as a legal word in deeds: as, without impeachment of waste, i. e. without restraint or hindrance of waste. It should be written, in this sense, empeachment.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof.

Spenser on Ireland.

Tell thy king, I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to Christian liberty, or ensnaring of men's consciences.

Sanderson.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Deviz'd impeachments to imprison him.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution.

Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.

Swift.

3. Imputation; reproach.

He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,
And did request me, to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Ver.

To IMPE'ARL.† v. a. [emperler, Fr. "to impearle, to deck, or set thick with pearls." Cotgrave.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and every flower.

Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dew of the morning impearl every thorn,
and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth.

Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABI'LITY.† n. s. [impeccabilité, Fr. "from impeccable."] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

It doth cause an everlasting impeccability.

Salkeld, Treat. of Angels, (1613), p. 234.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

Pope.

IMPE'CCABLE.† adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

If we honour the man, must we hold his pen impeccable?

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 43.
Thou makest no man so acceptable, as that Thou makest him impeccable.

Donne, Devot. p. 592.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

God is infallible, impeccable, and absolutely perfect.

Skellon, Deism Revealed, Dial. iv.

IMPE'CCANCY.* n. s. [old Fr. impeccance.] Impeccability.

Holy spirits dignified, from their purity and impeccancy.

Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 218.

To IMPE'DE.† v. a. [impedio, Lat. Considered by Heylin, in 1656, as an uncouth and unusual word.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede its passage.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

The way is open, and no stop to force

The stars return, or to impede their course.

Creech, Manilius.

IMPE'DIMENT.† n. s. [impedimentum, Lat.]

1. Any obstruction to passage; as, a stake, or sharp instrument, to retard the progress of an enemy: a military term. This primary sense of the word [in and pedes, Lat.] is overlooked by Dr. Johnson.

The children of Israel had prepared for war, and had shut up the passages of the hill country, and had fortified all the tops of the high hills, and had laid impediments in the champaign countries.

Judith, v. 1.

2. Hindrance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

Hooker.

But for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke.

Shakespeare.

May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
Dream of impediment. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech.

St. Mark, vii. 32.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Free from the impediments of light and noise,

Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

Walker.

To IMPE'DIMENT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

Cockeram.

IMPE'DITIVE.* adj. [from impedite.] Causing hindrance; having power to obstruct.

There are other cases concerning things unlawful by accident, in respect to the evil effect of the same; to wit, as they may be impeditive of good, or causative, or at the least (for we must use such words) occasionative of evil.

Bp. Sanderson, on Promiss. Oaths, iii. § 11.

To IMPE'L. v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide.

Dryden, Ov.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast.

Pope.

Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.

Pope, Odys.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

Pope.

IMPE'LLENT.† n. s. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

S. What do you mean by voluntary oaths?

C. Those that no other impellent but myself, or my own worldly gain or interest, extort from me.

Hammond, Pract. Catech. ii. § 8.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

Glanville.

IMPE'LLER.* n. s. [from impel.] One that impels or urges forward.

As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to sin.

South, Sermon, iv. 85.

To IMPE'N.* v. a. [from pen.] To shut up; to enclose in a narrow place.

Like a sheep impenn'd in the fold.

Fulham, Res. ii. 59.

He, whom the heaven of heavens cannot containe,

In narrow bowels doth impenn remaine.

Fitzgeffry, Blessed Birth-day, p. 16.

TO IMPE'ND. v. n. [impendeo, Lat.]

1. To hang over.

Destruction sure o'er all your heads impends;
Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins,
and our lively sense of God's judgements with.

Smalbridge, Serm.

No story I unfold of publick woes,
Nor bare advices of impending foes. Pope, Odyssey.

IMPE'NDENCY.* n. s. [from impendent.]

The state of hanging over.

The present impendency of God's judgements.
Hammond, Works, iv. 492.

IMPE'NDENT. adj. [impendens, Lat.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely.

In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rules the appetite to aversion. Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain
Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air
Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.

IMPE'NDENCE. n. s. [from impendent.]

The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impudence of a greater sensible evil.

Hale.

IMPENETRAB'ILITY. n. s. [impenetrabilité, Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton, Opticks.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPE'NETRABLE.† adj. [impenetrable, Fr.; impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

Nothing almost escaped that he achieved not,
were the thing never so difficult, or (as who saith) impenetrable. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73. b.

With hardening cold, and forming heat,
The Cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before the impenetrable shield was wrought. Dryd.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them,
and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cur

That ever kept with men.

— Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.

Shakspeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel. Bp. Taylor.

VOL. II.

IMPE'NETRABLENESS.* n. s. [from impenetrable.] The state of being impenetrable. Ash.

IMPE'NETRABLY.† adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

A cellar of strong sides, and impenetrably thick walls, dark and deep.

Dean King, Serm. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 20.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, impenetrably dull. Pope.

IMPE'NITENCE. } n. s. [impenitence, Fr. in IMPE'NITENCY. } and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes;
final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers.

IMPE'NITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent
men's requests; as, on the other side, the Apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted.

Hooker.

They died

Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves. Milton, P. L.

IMPE'NITENT.* n. s. One who neglects the duty of repentance.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPE'NITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.]
Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in.

Hammond.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets! Pope.

IMPE'NNOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.]
Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received an earwigg hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impeunous insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies.

Brown.

TO IMPE'OPLE.* v. a. [from people.] To form into a community. See TO EM-PEOPLE.

Thou hast helped to impeople hell.

Beaumont, Psyche, xvi. 19.

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Lat.]
Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South.

Those natural and involuntary actings are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale.

IMPE'RATIVE.† adj. [imperatíf, Fr.; im-perativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

He therefore instead of using an imperative style, by downright commanding such and such things, chose rather in a more gentle and condescending way to insinuate what was his will,
and our duty. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 239.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke, Lat. Gram.

IMPE'RATIVELY. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERATO'RIAL.* adj. [Lat. imperatorius.]
Commanding.

Moses delivered his law after an imperial way, by saying, Thou shalt not do this, and Thou shalt not do that. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 239.

IMPERCE'PTIBLE. adj. [impercéptible, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature impercéptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtlety, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost impercéptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost impercéptible to the touch, and even.

Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost impercéptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

IMPERCE'PTIBLE.* n. s. That which is not immediately perceived or discovered, on account of its smallness.

Microscopes bring to light shoals of living creatures in a spoonful of vinegar, &c. — I should be wonderfully pleased to see a natural history of impercéptibles, containing a true account of such vegetables and animals as grow and live out of sight. Tuller, No. 119.

IMPERCE'PTIBLENESS. n. s. [from imper-céptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtlety and impercépti-bleness to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCE'PTIBLY. adv. [from impercéptible.]
In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself impercéptibly, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares. Addison.

IMPERCI'PIENT.* adj. [in and percipient.]
Not perceiving; not having the power of perception.

There is no supposing the soul to be impercipient in sleep, but by supposing the perceptivity of it to depend upon matter, which I have shewn in many places of this section to be a contradiction; or by supposing that it sleeps in its own nature. Baxter on the Soul, i. 549.

IMPERDIB'ILITY.* n. s. [from imperdible.]
State or quality of being imperdible.
Derham somewhere uses it in his Physico-Theology.

IMPE'RDIBLE.* adj. [imperditus, Lat.]
Not to be destroyed, or lost.

As they are harder in their acquisition, so are they more imperdible and steady in their stay.

Feltham, Serm. on Eccl. ii. 11.

IMPERFECT.⁷ adj. [imparfait, Fr.; imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state, Which, since his coming forth, is thought of, Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger

That his return was most required. Shakspeare.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. B. Jonson.

The middle action which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or incoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

Divers things we agree to be knowledge, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung, And died imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good: as, our best worship is imperfect.

To IMPERFECT.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To make imperfect. Not in use.

Time, which perfects some things, imperfects also others. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 28.

IMPERFECTION. n. s. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault; whether physical or moral, whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfection; and that which is supposed behevoful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many imperfections intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayward.

Imperfections would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfections than virtues. Addison, Spect.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfection in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Maria's love might justify your stay; Imperfectly the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

IMPERFECTNESS.* n. s. [from imperfect.] Failure; defect.

The obscurity of things, and the imperfectness of our finite understandings.

Mannyngham, Disc. (1681), p. 70.

Their authority, joined to the knowledge of my own imperfectness in the language, over-ruled me. Pope, Lett. to Mr. Bridges, cited by Dr. Warton.

IMPERFORABLE. adj. [in and perforo, Lat.] Not to be bored through.

IMPERFORATE. adj. [in and perforatus, Lat.] Not pierced through; without a hole.

Sometimes children are born imperfect; in which case a small puncture, dressed with a tent, effects the cure. Sharp.

IMPERFORATED.* adj. Closed up. It happeneth sometimes in imperfect persons. Brown, Vulg. Err. vii. 16.

IMPERFORATION.* n. s. [Fr. imperforation, Cotgrave.] The state of being closed.

IMPERIAL. adj. [imperial, Fr.; imperialis, Lat.]

1. Royal; possessing royalty.

Aim he took

At a fair vestal, thronged in the west; But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon, And the imperial vot'ress passed on In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakspeare.

2. Tokening royalty; marking sovereignty.

My due from thee is this imperial crown, Which, as immediate from thy place and blood, Derives itself to me. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Relating to an emperor or monarch; regal; royal; monarchical.

The main body of the marching foe Against the imperial palace is design'd. Dryden.

You that are a sovereign prince ally

Imperial power with your paternal sway. Dryden. To tame the proud, the fetter'd slave to free, These are imperial arts, and worthy these. Dryden, Æn.

IMPERIALIST. n. s. [from imperial.] One that belongs to an emperor.

The imperialists imputed the cause of so shameful a flight unto the Venetians.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

IMPERIALIZED.* adj. [from imperial.] Belonging to an emperor.

The Romanists cast away the witness of all imperialized authors then living.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 160.

IMPERIALLY.* adv. [from imperial.] In a royal manner.

IMPERIALTY.* n. s. [from imperial.] Imperial power.

Which seventh cannot be your papacy; it must then of necessity be a short Roman imperialty or empire, which followed upon the destruction of the sixth. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616), p. 165.

To IMPERIL.* v. a. [from peril.] To bring into danger. See To EMPERIL.

Will I imperial the innocence and candour of the author, by this calumny? B. Jonson, Magn. Lady. The civil polity, and authority of the magistrate, is hereby endamaged and imperialled.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, p. 35.

IMPERIOUS. adj. [imperieux, Fr. imperiosus, Latin.]

1. Commanding; tyrannical; authoritative; haughty; arrogant; assuming command.

If it be your proud will

To shew the power of your imperious eyes. Spenser.

This imperious man will work us all From princes into pages. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Not the imperious show Of the full fortun'd Caesar ever shall Be brooch'd with me. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop. He is an imperious dictator of the principles of vice, and impatient of all contradiction.

More, Divine Dialogues. How much I suffer'd, and how long I strove Against the assaults of this imperious love! Dryden.

Recollect what disorder hasty or imperious words from parents or teachers have caused in his thoughts. Locke.

2. Powerful; ascendant; overbearing. A man, by a vast and imperious mind, and a heart large as the sand upon the sea shore, could command all the knowledge of nature and art. Tillotson.

IMPERIOUSLY. adv. [from imperious.] With arrogance of command; with insolence of authority.

Who's there, that knocketh so imperiously? Shakspeare.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, six whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church. Bp. Hall.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures an esteem from any one. South.

The sage, transported at the approaching hour, Imperiously thrice thunder'd on the floor! Garth, Dispensary.

IMPERIOUSNESS. n. s. [from imperious.]

1. Authority; air of command. So would he use his imperiousness, that we had a delightful fear and awe, which made us loth to lose our hopes. Sidney.

2. Arrogance of command. Imperiousness and severity is but an ill way of treating men, who have reason of their own to guide them. Locke.

IMPERISHABLE.† adj. [imperissable, Fr. in and perish.] Not to be destroyed.

Devotion offers to transfigure our affections, from their impure and passive shapes, into immaculate and imperishable forms; and raise them up from infirmity to virtue; and make those desires, which have been the image of terrestrial figures, to bear only that of the celestial.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 37.

We find this our empyreal form Incapable of mortal injury, Imperishable; and though pierc'd with wound, Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd. Milton, P. L.

IMPERIWIGGED.* adj. [emperruqué, Fr.] Wearing a periwig. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. See To PERIWIG.

IMPERMANENCE.* } n. s. [in and perma-
IMPERMANENCY. } nence.] Want of duration; instability.

IMPERMEABLE.* adj. [in and permeable.] That may not be passed through.

Lands that have a retentive or impermeable soil, should be differently constituted from those that have one less retentive or more permeable.

Kürwan, on Manures, p. 54.

IMPERSONAL. adj. [impersonel, Fr. impersonalis, Lat.] Not varied according to the persons.

Impersonals be declined throughout all moods and tenses; a verb impersonal hath no nominative case before it. Accidence.

IMPERSONALITY.* n. s. [in and personality.] Indistinction of personality.

Junius is pleased to tell me, that he addresses himself to me personally. I shall be glad to see him. It is his impersonality that I complain of. Sir W. Draper, Junius's Lett. Woodfall's edit. i. 38.

IMPERSONALLY. adv. [from impersonal.] According to the manner of an impersonal verb.

To IMPERSONATE.* v. a. [from personate.] To personify.

The Egyptians, who impersonated nature, had made her a distinct principle, and even deified her under the name of Isis. Bp. Berkeley, Seris, §. 268.

The masques and pageantries of the age of Elizabeth were not only furnished by the heathen divinities, but often by the virtues and vices impersonated. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 498.

Some of these masques were moral dramas, where the virtues and vices were impersonated. Hurd, Dial.

IMPERSONICITY.* n. s. [in and perspicuity.] Want of clearness or perspicuity.

Either very long, or very short, periods are subject to obscurity: one not opening and spreading the matter enough; the other overburdening the auditor's memory. Yet whoso will not lose the acuteness and elegance in the one, or suffer the dismembering in the other, must in some things hazard the imperspicuity of his style.

Instructions for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 98.

IMPERSONUOUS.* adj. [in and perspicuous.] Wanting clearness. Bailey.

IMPERSUASIBLE. adj. [in and persuasibilis, Lat.] Not to be moved by persuasion.

Every pious person ought to be a Noah, a preacher of righteousness; and if it be his fortune to have as impersuasive an auditor, if he cannot avert the deluge, it will yet deliver his own soul, if he cannot benefit other men's. Dec. of Piety.

IMPERTINENCE.† n. s. [impertinentia, Fr.; IMPERTINENCY.] n. s. [from impertinent.]

1. That which is of no present weight; that which has no relation to the matter in hand; something not belonging to the subject.

Some though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinencies. Bacon.

O, matter and impertinency mix'd,
Reason and madness! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Troublesome; intrusion.
It will be said I handle an art no way suitable to my employments or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency.

We should avoid the vexation and impertinence of pedants, who affect to talk in a language not to be understood. Swift.

3. Trifle; thing of no value.
I envy your felicity, delivered from the gilded impertinencies of life, to enjoy the moments of a solid contentment. Evelyn.

Nothing is more easy than to represent as impertinencies any parts of learning, that have no immediate relation to the happiness or convenience of mankind. Addison.

There are many subtle impertinencies learnt in the schools, and many painful trifles, even among the mathematical theorems and problems.

Watts on the Mind.

4. Sauciness; rudeness.

It often happens in public assemblies, that a party who came thither together, or whose impertinencies are of an equal pitch, act in concert, and are so full of themselves as to give disturbance to all that are about them. Sometimes you have a set of whisperers, who lay their heads together in order to sacrifice every body within their observation; sometimes a set of laughers, that keep up an insipid mirth in their own corner, and by their noise and gestures show they have no respect for the rest of the company. Spectator, No. 168.

IMPERTINENT.† adj. [impertinent, Fr. in and pertinens, Lat.]

1. Of no relation to the matter in hand; of no weight.

The law of angels we cannot judge altogether impertinent unto the affairs of the church of God. Hooker.

The contemplation of things that are impertinent to us, and do not concern us, are but a more spacious idleness. Tillotson.

2. Importunate; intrusive; meddling.

That spear directed by an impertinent malice, which opened his side, though it brought forth blood and water, caused no dolorous sensation; because the body was then dead.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

3. Foolish; trifling; negligent of the present purpose.

'Tis not a sign two lovers are together, when there can be so impertinent as to enquire what the world does. Pope.

4. Rude; unmannerly.

The ladies, whom you visit, think a wise man the most impertinent creature living; therefore you cannot be offended, that they are displeased with you. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPERTINENT.† n. s.

1. A trifler; a meddler; an intruder; one who enquires or interposes where he has no right or call.

Governors would have enough to do to trouble their heads with the politics of every meddling officious impertinent. L'Estrange, Fab.

2. A rude, unmannerly, or saucy person.

There are another kind of impertinents, which a man is perplexed with in mixed company; and those are your loud speakers. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPERTINENTLY.† adv. [from impertinent.]

1. Without relation to the present matter.
I call not impertinently to mind, that one of my time had wit enough in Venice to become the civil head of that republick.

Sir H. Walton, Surv. of Education.

Yet more impertinently the Spanish describers, remembered before, account their longitude from east to west, utterly against all other geography.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 270.

Those moral virtues— are here brought in by St. Paul, I hope not impertinently, under this head, justice, and continence, and judgement to come. Hanmond, Works, iv. 521.

2. Troublesomely; officiously; intrusively.
I have had joy given me as preposterously, and as impertinently, as they give it to men who marry where they do not love. Sir J. Suckling.

The blesseddest of mortals, now the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impertinently importuned, that great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hooker.

Why will any man be so impertinently officious as to tell me all this is only fancy? If it is a dream, let me enjoy it. Addison.

3. Rudely; saucily.

IMPERTURBABLE.* adj. [in and perturb.] Impossible to be disturbed; incapable of being disturbed.

Ash, from Dict. of Arts.

IMPERTURBATION.* n. s. [in and perturbation; Lat. imperturbatus.] Calmness; tranquillity; freedom from perturbation.

In our copying of this equality and imperturbation, we must profess with the Apostle, we have not received the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 342.

To propose the acquisition of a complete knowledge of all things in this life, of an absolute imperturbation of mind, and constant infallibility, is no less vain. Hen. Wharton, Serm. (1698,) ii. 116.

IMPERTURBED.* adj. [in and perturb.] Undisturbed; calm. Bailey.

IMPEVIOUS. adj. [impervius, Lat.]

1. Unpassable; impenetrable.
Lest the difficulty of passing back
Stay his return, perhaps, over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world.

Milton, P. L.

We may then discern how close a texture glass is, since so very thin a film proved so impervious to the air, that it was forced to break the glass to free itself. Boyle.

The cause of reflection is not the impinging of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies.

Newton, Opticks.

A great many vessels are, in this state, impervious by the fluids. Arbuthnot.

From the damp earth impervious vapours rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies. Pope.

2. Inaccessible. Perhaps improperly used.

A river's mouth, impervious to the wind,
And clear of rocks. Pope, Odys.

IMPEVIOUSLY.* adv. [from impervious.] Impenetrably; unpassably.

IMPEVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from impervious.]

The state of not admitting any passage.
IMPERTANSIBILITY. n. s. [in and pertanse, Latin.] Impossibility to be passed through.

I willingly declined those many ingenious reasons given by others; as of the imtransibility of eternity, and impossibility therein to attain to the present limit of antecedent ages. Hale.

To IMPESTER.* v. a. [empestrer, Fr.] To trouble; to harass; to entangle; to incumber; to pester. See TO PESTER.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPETIGINOUS. adj. [from impetigo, Lat.] Scurfy; covered with small scabs.

IMPETRABLE. adj. [impetrabilis, from impetro, Lat. impetrate, Fr.] Possible to be obtained. Dict.

To IMPETRATE.† v. a. [impetrer, Fr. impetro, Latin.] To obtain by intreaty. He hath impetrated reconciliation.

Abp. Usher, Letter xxiii. Life and Letters by Parr, p. 50.

Impetrating this of God, that this penitential satisfaction may be so much blessed, as to restore some value of time thither, where I am to account for so much idle dissipation of it.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. Pref.

IMPETRATE.* part adj. [from the verb.] Obtained by application or intreaty.

The one might be as easily impetrated as the other. Id. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 227.

IMPETRATION.† n. s. [impetration, Fr. impetratio, from impetro, Lat.] The act of obtaining by prayer or intreaty. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the authority, which indeed is excellent, of bishop Jeremy Taylor. But the word appears to have been common; and was also applied formerly to the pre-obtaining from the court of Rome benefices belonging to the king, which was prohibited.

The said cardinal did not know the impetration of the said bulls to have been to the contempt and prejudice of the king, or that it was against any statute. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 264.

Application and impetration, in this matter we have in hand, are of equal extent.

Alp. Usher, Letter xxiii.

The impetration of some favour.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. p. i. Pref.

The blessed sacrament is the mystery of the death of Christ, and the application of his blood which was shed for the remission of sins, and is the great means of impetration, and the meritorious cause of it. Bp. Taylor.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy, and means of impetration in this world. Bp. Taylor.

IMPETRATIVE.* adj. [from impetrare.] Able to obtain by entreaty.

O Saviour, Thy prayers, which were most perfect and impetrative, are they by which our weak and unworthy prayers receive both life and glory.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

IMPETRATORY.* adj. [from impetrare.] Beseeching; obtaining by intreaty.

Alms are therefore effective to the abolition and pardon of our sins, because they are preparatory to and impetratory of, the grace of repentance, and are fruits of repentance.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 3. ch. 2.

IMPETUOSITY. n. s. [impetuosité, Fr. from impetuus.] Violence; fury; vehemence; force.

I will set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

The whole intrigue was contrived by the duke, and so violently pursued by his spirit and impetuosity. Clarendon.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to take their freest range, and act with the utmost impetuosity.

Dec. of Piety.

IMPETUOUS.† adj. [impetueus, Fr. from impetus, Latin.] This word Heylin, in 1656, enumerates among the uncouth and uncommon. But see IMPETUOUSLY.

1. Violent; forcible; fierce.

Their virtue, like their Tiber's flood, Rolling its course, design'd their country's good; But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed, From the low earth tore some polluted weed.

Prior.

2. Vehement of mind; passionate.

The king 'tis true, is noble, but impetuous.

Rowe.

IMPETUOUSLY.† adv. [from impetuosus.] Violently; vehemently: both of men and things.

Impatient of the wrong, impetuously he raves.

Drayton, Polyolb. (1622), S. 1.

He would be—absolutely wanton, impetuously self-willed.

Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 22.

They view the windings of the hoary Nar; Through rocks and woods impetuously he glides, While froth and foam the fretting surface hides.

Addison.

IMPETUOUSNESS. n. s. [from impetuosus.] Violence; fury; vehemence of passion.

I wish all words of rage might vanish in that breath that utters them; that as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, so they might in transiency.

Decay of Piety.

IMPETUS.† n. s. [Latin.] Violent tendency to any point; violent effort.

There is a sort of valour, which naturally springs out of the very crisis and temper of men's bodies; which is nothing else but a certain impetus, or brisk fermentation of the blood and spirits.

Scott, Sermon before the Artillery-Comp. (1680.)

Why did not they continue their descent till they were contiguous to the sun, whither both mutual attraction and impetus carried them?

Bentley, Sermon vii. (1692.)

IMPICTURED.* adj. [from picture.] Painted; impressed.

His pallid face, impiictured with death, She bathed oft. Spenser, Astrophel.

IMPIER.* n. s. Our old word for umpire, which leads us to the Latin etymon, impar; and induces us to discard what Dr. Johnson, and those whom he has followed, propose as the root of umpire. See UMPIRE. Huloet thus defines the word, in the form now given. "Impier, or umpier, a judge or mediator taken to deem a matter debated."

To IMPIERCE.* v. a. [in and pierce.] To pierce through; to penetrate. See To EMPIERCE.

He feels those secret and impiercing flames.

Drayton's Moyses, (1604.)

Time may come, when deep impierced sting Shall prick your heart; and it shall melt with sorrowing. More, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 34.

IMPIERCEABLE.† adj. [in and pierce.] Impenetrable; not to be pierced.

Exceeding rage inflam'd the furious beast; — For never felt his impierceable breast So wondrous force from hand of living wight.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPIETY. n. s. [impiété, French; impietas, Latin.]

1. Irreverence to the Supreme Being; contempt of the duties of religion.

To keep that oath were more impiety Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

Shakespeare.

2. An act of wickedness; expression of irreligion. In this sense it has a plural.

If they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited.

Shakespeare.

Can Juno such impieties approve? We have a melancholy prospect of the state of our religion: such amazing impieties can be equalled by nothing but by those cities consumed of old by fire.

Swift.

To IMPIGNORATE. v. a. [in and pignus, Latin.] To pawn; to pledge.

IMPIGNORATION. n. s. [from impignorare.] The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

To IMPINGE. v. n. [impingo, Latin.] To fall against; to strike against; to clash with.

Things are reserved in the memory by some corporeal exuvia and material images, which, having impinged on the common sense, rebound thence into some vacant cells of the brain.

Glanville, Scepstis.

The cause of reflexion is not the state of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies.

Newton, Opticks.

To IMPINGUATE. v. a. [in and pinguis, Latin.] To fatten; to make fat.

Frictions also do more fill and impinguate the body than exercise; for that in frictions the inward parts are at rest.

Bacon.

IMPIOUS. adj. [impius, Latin.] Irreligious; wicked; profane; without reverence of religion.

That Scripture standeth not the church' of God in any stead to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton, P. L.

Then lewd Aechmeulus he laid in dust, Who stain'd his stepdame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

And impious nations fear'd eternal night. Dryden.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway, The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

Since after there may rise an impious line, Coarse mangers of the human face divine: Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part, And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.

They, impious, dar'd to prey

On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

Grand mistakes in religion proceed from taking literally what was meant figuratively, from which several impious absurdities followed, terminating in infidelity. Forbes.

IMPIOUSLY. adv. [from impious.] Profanely; wickedly.

The Roman wit, who impiously divides His hero and his gods to different sides, I would condemn. Glanville.

IMPIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from impious.] Contempt of the duties of religion.

Men—even by nature are taught to hope of another life, from which neither ignorance nor impiousness can drive them.

Sir W. Cornwallis, Disc. on Seneca.

IMPLACABILITY.† n. s. [from implacabile.] Inexorableness; irreconcilable enmity; unappeasable malice.

What calamity happened to that most noble city of Rome by the implacability, or wrath insatiable, of these two captains!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 101.

The powder project—with fury and implacability came to be resolved on by a pack of boufeux. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) D. d. 2.

IMPLACABLE.† adj. [implacabilis, Lat. implacable, Fr.]

1. Not to be pacified; inexorable; malicious; constant in enmity.

His incensment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Darah bears a generous mind; But to implacable revenge inclin'd;

A bounteous master, but a deadly foe. Dryden.

The French are the most implacable and the most dangerous enemies of the British nation. Addison.

2. Admitting no relief or ease; not to be assuaged. Dr. Johnson overpasses this sense.

O how I burne with implacable fyre!

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 44.

I burn

With scorching heat of implacable fire.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, v. 15.

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and bruise'd

Into their substance pent, which wrought them pain

Implacable, and many a dolorous groan.

Milton, P. L.

IMPLACABLENESS.* n. s. [from implacabile.] The state of being implacable.

Little as the archbishop gained upon them by his priestly implacableness, the king gained much less by his princely condescensions.

Bp. Parker, Reproof to the Rehearsers. Trans. (1673,) p. 363.

IMPLA'CABLY. adv. [from implacable.]

1. With malice not to be pacified; inexorably.

An order was made for disarming all the papists; upon which, though nothing was after done, yet it kept up the apprehensions in the people of dangers, and disinclined them from the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

Clarendon.

2. It is once used by Dryden in a kind of mixed sense of a tyrant's love.

I love,

And 'tis below my greatness to disown it:

Love thee implacably, yet hate thee too. Dryden.

To IMPLA'NT. v. a. [in and planto, Lat.]

To infix; to insert; to place; to engraft; to settle; to set; to sow. The original meaning of putting a vegetable into the ground to grow is not often used.

How can you him unworthy then decree,
In whose chief part your words implanted be?

Sidney.

See, Father! what first-fruits on earth are sprung,

From thy implanted grace in man! Milton, P. L.

No need of public sanctions this to bind,

Which Nature has implanted in the mind.

Dryden.

There grew to the outside of the arytoides another cartilage, capable of motion, by the help of some muscles that were implanted in it. Ray.
God, having endowed man with faculties of knowing, was no more obliged to implant those innate notions in his mind than that, having given him reason, hands, and materials, he should build him bridges.

Locke.

IMPLANTATION. † n. s. [implantation, Fr.

from implant.] The act of setting or planting; the act of enfixing or settling.

This [is] more especially by the expressed way of insinuation or implantation.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 48.

IMPLA'USIBLE. † adj. [in and plausibile.]

Not specious; not likely to seduce or persuade.

So improbable, so implausible means for accomplishing so great effects. Barrow, Works, i. 343.

Nothing can better improve political school-boys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine.

Swift.

IMPLA'USIBLY.  adv.* [from implausible.]

Without show of probability.

To IMPLA'CH.  v. a.* [from pleach.] To interweave. See To PLEACH.

These talents of their hair,

With twisted metal amorously implaech'd,

I have receiv'd from many a several fair.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

To IMPLA'AD.  v. a.* [old Fr. emplaidier.

See To EMPLAID.] To accuse; to indict.

The honour of God seemeth violated by these invasions, since even the law of God is said to be impleaded by such aspersions.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 127.

Righteousness in a judicial sense imports as much as a legal discharge, whereby the person impleaded becomes right in the court, or righteous.

Norris, on the Beatitudes, p. 91.

IMPLE'ADER.  n. s.* [from To implead.]

An accuser; one who indicts another.

Ye envious and deadly malicious, ye impleaders and action-threateners, how long shall the Lord suffer you in his house, in which dwelleth nothing but peace and charity!

Harnar, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1587), p. 176.

The Gombette law, which was instituted by Gondebaud, king of Burgundy in the year 501, allowed the expedient of duelling to those impleaders, whom the administered oath to offenders did not sufficiently satisfy for an obtaining of their resigned and voluntary acquittance from the cause complained of.

Hist. of Duellings, p. 3.

IMPLE'ASING.  adj.* [in and please.] Not pleasing; disagreeable.

A melancholy man is a strayer from the drove: one that nature made sociable, because she made him man; and a crazed disposition hath altered; implesing to all, as all to him.

Overbury, Charact. (ed. 1627), sign. G. 5. b.

To IMPLE'DGE.  v. a.* [from pledge.] To gage; to pawn.

Sherwood.

IMPLEMENT. n. s. [implementum, from impleo, Latin.]

1. Something that fills up vacancy, or supplies wants.

Unto life many implements are necessary; more, if we seek such a life as hath in it joy, comfort, delight, and pleasure.

Hooker.

2. Instrument of manufacture; tools of a trade; vessels of a kitchen.

Wood hath coined seventeen thousand pounds, and hath his tools and implements to coin six times as much.

Swift.

It is the practice of the eastern regions for the artists in metals to carry about with them the whole implements of trade to the house where they find employment.

Broome.

IMPLETION. n. s. [impleo, Lat.] The act of filling; the state of being full.

Theophrastus conceiveth, upon a plentiful impletion, there may succeed a disruption of the matrix.

Brown.

IMPLEX. adj. [implexus, Latin.] Intricate; entangled; complicated; opposed to simple.

Every poem is, according to Aristotle's division, either simple or implex: it is called simple when there is no change of fortune in it; implex, when the fortune of the chief actor changes from bad to good, or from good to bad.

Addison, Spect. No. 297.

To IMPLICATE. † v. a. [impliquer, Fr.

implico, Latin.] Provided that he entangle not himself with them, ἐμπλέκεται, implicatur. Abp. Laud's Answ. to Lord Say.] To entangle; to embarrass; to involve; to infold.

The ingredients of saltpetre do so mutually implicate and hinder each other, that the concrete acts but very languidly.

Boyle.

IMPLICATION. n. s. [implicatio, Lat. implication, French, from implicate.]

1. Involution; entanglement.

Three principal causes of firmness are the grossness, the quiet contact, and the implication of the component parts.

Boyle.

2. Inference not expressed, but tacitly inculcated.

Though civil causes, according to some men, are of less moment than criminal, yet the doctors are, by implication, of a different opinion.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPLICATIVE.  adj.* [from To implicate.]

Having implication.

IMPLICATIVELY.  adv.* [from implicative.]

By implication.

In revealing the confession of these men, it is implicatively granted, their fault was not then to be punished, and so it appears no fault.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646), p. 102.

Virtually and implicatively, and by necessary consequence, it takes away clergy from the principal in all those cases, where it takes it from the accessory before. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 49. V. sect. 2.

IMPLI'CIT. † adj. [implicite, Fr. implicitus, Latin.]

1. Entangled; infolded; complicated. This sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says, citing two examples of the word which he ascribes to Pope and Thomson; the latter of which belongs to Milton, and not to Thomson. The sense of "wrapped up," is what our old lexicography assigns to implicit. See Bullokar's Expositor, edit. 1656.

The humble shrub,

And bush with frizzled hair implicit.

Milton, P. L. vii. 323.

Many of them [periods] together, if without connexions, are but implicit argumentation at most.

Instruct. for Oratory, Oxf. (1682), p. 37.

In his woolly fleece

I cling implicit.

Pope.

2. Inferred; tacitly comprised; not expressed.

In the first establishments of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such and such words should be signs, whereby they would express their thoughts one to another.

South.

Our express requests are not granted, but the implicit desires of our hearts are fulfilled.

Smoltrudge.

3. Resting upon another; connected with another over which that which is connected to it has no power; trusting without reserve or examination. Thus, by implicit credulity, I may believe a letter yet not opened, when I am confident of the writer's veracity.

There be false peaces or unities, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance; for all colours will agree in the dark.

Bacon.

No longer by implicit faith we err,

Whilst every man's his own interpreter. Denham.

IMPLI'CITLY. adv. [from implicit.]

1. By inference comprised, though not expressed.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence: he may acknowledge what he will with his mouth, but in his heart he hath said there is no God.

Bentley.

2. By connection with something else; dependently; with unreserved confidence or obedience.

My blushing mind with conscious fear retires,
And whom they like, implicitly admires.

Roscommon.

Learn not to dispute the methods of his providence; but humbly and implicitly to acquiesce in and adore them.

Aterbury.

We implicitly follow in the track in which they lead us, and comfort ourselves with this poor reflection, that we shall fare as well as those that go before us.

Rogers.

IMPLI'CITNESS.  n. s.* [from implicit.] The state of being implicit; implication; dependence on the judgement or authority of another.

Scott.

IMPLI'CITY.  n. s.* [implicité, Fr. from implicit.] Entanglement; incumbrance; obscure involution.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625), p. 1.

IMPLORA'TION.* n. s. [old French, imploration; from implore.] Solicitation; supplication.

This imploration and worship is holy.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 250.

The three points, wherein they did pretend to have prevented his majesty's former imploration of their concurrence.

Sir H. Wotton, Dispatch in 1622, Rem. p. 541.

TO IMPLORE. v. a. [implorer, Fr. implore, Lat.]

1. To call upon in supplication; to solicit.

They ship their oars, and crown with wine
The holy goblet to the pow'rs divine,
Imploring all the gods that reign above.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To ask; to beg.

Do not say 'tis superstition, that
I kneel, and then implore her blessing.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

IMPLO'RE. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of begging; intreaty; solicitation. Not in use.

Urged sore

With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPLO'ER.† n. s. [from implore.] Solicitor. This is an old substantive; for it occurs in Sherwood's dictionary; but not in Shakespeare's Hamlet, as cited by Dr. Johnson; the true word there being implicator; a word not likely to be revived.

IMPLU'MED. adj. [implumis, Lat. Without feathers.

Dict.

Striving to loose the knot that fast him ties,
Himself in straighter bonds too rash implies.

Spenser, F. Q.

And Phœbus flying so most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To involve or comprise as a consequence or concomitant.

That it was in use among the Greeks, the word trichlinium implieth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

What follows next is no objection; for that implies a fault.

Dryden.

Bows the strength of brawny arms implies,

Emblems of valour, and of victory.

Dryden.

Where a malicious act is proved, a malicious intention is implied.

Sherlock.

TO IMPO'CKET.* v. a. [from pocket; Fr. empocher.] To put into the pocket.

The vulgar sort stood staring with their hands impocketed.

Carleton's Memoirs, p. 57.

TO IMPO'ISON.† v. a. [empoisonner, Fr. It might be written empoison, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed it abundantly is. See TO EMPOISON.

Brown.

IMPO'LCY.* n. s. [in and policy.] Imprudence; indiscretion; want of forecast.

The schemes of Providence and nature are too deeply laid to be overthrown by man's impolicy.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon. (1793.)

IMPO'ISHED.* adj. [in and polished, Lat. impolitus.] Unpolished; rude.

The lofty phrase—could not be followed nor sufficiently expressed in our rude and impolished English language.

T. Hudson, Dedic. of his Hist. of Judith, 1621.

IMPOLI'TE.* adj. [in and polite.] Not polite; rude.

I never saw such impolite confusion at any country wedding in Britain.

Drummond, Trav. (lett. 3. 1744,) p. 76.

IMPOLI'TENESS.* n. s. [from impolite.] Want of politeness.

The impoliteness of his manners seemed to attest his impoliteness.

Ld. Chesterfield, Character.

IMPOLI'TICAL. } adj. [in and political.]
IMPOLI'TICK. } Imprudent; indiscreet; void of art or forecast.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolitical; but rather to use all prudent foresight and circumspection, lest our simplicity be over-reach'd by cunning slights.

Hooker.

IMPOLI'TICALLY.† } adv. [in and political.]
IMPOLI'TICKLY. } Without art or forecast.

The porosity or imporsity betwixt the tangible parts, and the greatness or smallness of the pores.

Bacon.

IMPO'ROUS. adj. [in and porous.] Free from pores; free from vacuities or interstices; close of texture; completely solid.

It has its earthly and salinus parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discreted by atomical terminations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

If atoms should descend plumb down with equal velocity, being all perfectly solid and imporous, they would never the one overtake the other.

Ray on the Creation.

TO IMPO'RT. v. a. [importo, Lat.]

1. To carry into any country from abroad: opposed to export.

For Elis I would sail with utmost speed,
To import twelve mares, which there luxurious feed.

Pope.

2. To imply; to infer.

Himself not only comprehended all our necessities, but in such sort also framed every petition as might most naturally serve for many; and doth, though not always require, yet always import a multitude of speakers together.

The name of discipline importeth not as they would fain have it construed; but the self same thing it signifieth, which the name of doctrine doth.

Hooker.

This question we now asked, imported, as that we thought this land a land of magicians. Bacon.

3. To produce in consequence.

Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his return was most requir'd.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. [Importer, importe, French. Importation.] To be of moment: as, it imports; it is of weight or consequence.

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious

Importeth thee to know, this bears.

That it importunes death and doleful dreyhedd.

Spenser, F. Q.

IMPORTUNE.† adj. [importun, old French, importunus, Lat. It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the second syllable.]

1. Constantly recurring; troublesome by frequency.

All that charge did fervently apply,
With greedy malice and importune toil;
And planted there their huge artillery,
With which they daily made most dreadful battery.

Spenser, F. Q.

Henry, king of England, needed not to have bestowed such great sums, nor so to have busied himself with importune and incessant labour, to compass my death and ruin, if I had been a feigned person.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

He is apaid with his fortune,
And for he n'll be importune
Unto no wight, ne onerous.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 5632.

And th' armies of their creatures all, and some Do serve to them, and with importune might War against us, the vassals of their will.

Spenser.

If the upper soul can check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope, that after a few years of sensuality, that importune rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, this would be some colour for that novel persuasion.

Hammond.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune.

Glanville, Scepsis.

Certainly the just God cannot be so importune and unreasonable a master, as to enjoin us what is physically impossible, to expect to reap where he has not sown, to require bricks without allowance of straw.

Bentley, Serm. ix.

3. Unseasonable; coming, asking, or happening at a wrong time.

No fair to thine
Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze and worship thee. Milton, P. L.

Imposing foreign lords for foreign gold.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose
Thy plagues, and curse them with such ills as those. Pope.

2. To enjoin as a duty or law.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep?

There was a thorough way made by the sword for the imposing of the laws upon them.

Thou on the deep imposest nobler laws,
And by that justice hath remov'd the cause.

Christianity hath hardly imposed any other laws upon us, but what are enacted in our natures, or are agreeable to the prime and fundamental laws of it. Tillotson.

Impose but your commands,
This hour shall bring you twenty thousand hands.

It was neither imposed on me, nor so much as the subject given me by any man. Dryden.

3. To fix on; to impute to.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature, we impute unto nativity itself. Brown.

upon the predominancy of that element, whose name is ascribed to it. Boyle.

3. Injunction of any thing as a law or duty.

Their determination is to trouble you with no more suit; unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets. Shakespeare.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

Milton, P. L.

4. Constraint; oppression.

The constraint of receiving and holding opinions
by authority was rightly called imposition. Locke.

A greater load has been laid on us than we have been able to bear, and the grossest impositions have been submitted to, in order to forward the dangerous designs of a faction. Swift.

Let it not be made, contrary to its own nature,
the occasion of strife, a narrow spirit, and unreasonable impositions on the mind and practice.

Watts on the Mind.

5. Cheat; fallacy; imposture.

Donne, Poems, p. 71.

IMPOSSIB'ILITY. n. s. [impossibilitè, Fr. from impossible.]

1. Impracticability; the state of being not feasible.

Simple Philoclea, it is the impossibility that doth torment me; for unlawful desires are punished after the effect of enjoying, but impossible desires in the desire itself. Sidney.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whitegift.

Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun,
Murdering impossibility, to make

What cannot be, slight work. Shakespeare, Coriol.

They confound difficulty with impossibility.

Those who assert the impossibility of space existing without matter, must make body infinite.

When we see a man of like passions and weakness with ourselves going before us in the paths of duty, it confutes all lazy pretences of impossibility.

Rogers.

2. That which cannot be done.

Though men do, without offence, wish daily that the affairs, which with evil success are past, might have fallen out much better; yet to pray that they may have been any other than they are,
this being a manifest impossibility in itself, the rules of religion do not permit.

Impossibilities! oh no, there's none,
Could I bring thy heart captive home. Cowley.

IMPOST. n. s. [impost, impôt, French; im- positum, Latin.] A tax: a toll; custom paid.

Taxes and imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon, Ess.

IMPO'STS. n. s. [imposte, Fr.] In architecture, that part of a pillar, in vaults and arches, on which the weight of the whole building lieth. Ainsworth.

Shame and pain, poverty and sickness, yea death and hell itself, are but the trophies of those fatal conquests got by that grand impostor, the devil, over the deluded sons of men.

South.

IMPO'STUME.* See IMPOSTHUME, and To IMPOSTHUME. The word was formerly written oftener without the h than with it.

IMPO'STURAGE.* n. s. [from imposture.] Imposition; cheat. Not now in use.

Many other practices of human art and invention, which help crookedness, lameness, dimness of sight, &c. no man is so foolish as to impute to the devil's invention, or to count them any hurtful imposturage.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 127.

IMPO'STURE. n. s. [imposture, Fr. impostura, Latin.] Cheat; fraud; supposititiousness; cheat committed by giving to persons or things a false character.

That the soul and angels have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned; but who is it that retains not a great part of the imposture, by allowing them a definite ubi, which is still but imagination?

Glanville, Scep sis.

Open to them so many of the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve.

Evelyn.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with that title.

South.

Form new legends, And fill the world with follies and impostures.

Irene.

IMPO'STURED.* adj. [from imposture.] Having the nature of imposture.

VOL. II.

What have vile I to do with noble day,
Which shews us heaven's fair face! that face which I

Wantonly scorn'd, and cast my love away
Upon impostur'd lust's foul mystery.

Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 102.

IMPO'STUROUS.* adj. [from imposture.] Deceitful; cheating.

Twice my thoughts were prompted by mine eye to hold thy strictness false and imposturous.

These were the pious impoverishers of bishops first, and then the kings of England.

Bp. Gauden, Anti-Baal-Brith, (1661,) p. 70.

IMPO'VERISHMENT.* n. s. [from impoverish.] Cause of poverty; drain of wealth. See EMPOVERISHMENT.

It might tend to the state's impoverishment.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) sign. H. h.

The king afterward extended his bounty in so large and ample a manner, as procured his own impoverishment.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 4.

To IMPO'UND. v. a. [in and pound. See POUND.]

1. To enclose as in a pound; to shut in; to confine.

The great care was rather how to impond the rebels, that none of them might escape, than that any doubt was made to vanquish them.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To shut up in a pinfold.

England

Hath taken and imponded as a stray
The king.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray, and imponded him, with intention to restore him to the right owner.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

To IMPO'WER. See To EMPOWER.

IMPRAC'TICABILITY.* n. s. [from impracticable.] Impossibility.

IMPRAC'TICABLE. adj. [impracticable, Fr. in and practicable.]

1. Not to be performed; unfeasible; impossible.

Had there been not still remaining bodies, the legitimate offsprings of the antediluvian earth, 'twould have been an extravagant and impracticable undertaking to have gone about to determine any thing concerning it.

Woodward.

To preach up the necessity of that which our experience tells us is utterly impracticable, were to affright mankind with the terrible prospect of universal damnation.

Rogers.

2. Untractable; unmanageable; stubborn.

That fierce impracticable nature

Is govern'd by a dainty-finger'd girl.

Rowe.

IMPRAC'TICABLENESS.† n. s. [from impracticable.]

1. Impossibility.

I do not know a greater mark of an able minister than that of rightly adapting the several faculties of men, nor is any thing more to be lamented than the impracticableness of doing this. Swift.

2. Untractableness; stubbornness.

The greatest difficulty in these sieges was from the impracticableness of the ground.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, (Q. Anne.)

To IMPRECATE. v. a. [imprecor, Lat.] To call for evil upon himself or others.

IMPRECATION. n. s. [imprecatio, Lat. imprecation, Fr. from imprecate.] Curse; prayer by which any evil is wished to another or himself.

My mother shall the horrid furies raise

With imprecations.

Chapman, Odyssey.
Sir John Hotham, uncurs'd by any imprecation of mine, paid his own and his eldest son's heads.

King Charles.

With imprecations thus he fill'd the air,
And angry Neptune heard th' unrighteous pray'r.
Pope.

IMPRECATORY. adj. [from imprecate.] Containing wishes of evil.

To IMPREGNATE. v. a. [in and prægn, Lat.] Lord Monboddo considered this word as coined by Milton; but it was common before his time, though Dr. Johnson found no example earlier than that of the poet.] To fill with young; to fill with any matter or quality; to make pregnant.

The cane did again appear with a linen hanging thereat so grossly impregn'd, as it promised to be delivered of a most happy burthen.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quirio, iv. 13.

Semele doth Bacchus bear,

Impregn'd of Jove. More, Song of the Soul, l. i. 58.

In her ears the sound

Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregn'd

With reason, to her seeming. Milton, P. L.

The unfruitful rock itself, impregn'd by thee,
Forms lucid stones. Thomson.

IMPREGNABLE. adj. [imprenable, Fr.]

1. Not to be stormed; not to be taken.

Two giants kept themselves in a castle, seated upon the top of a rock, impregnable, because there was no coming to it but by one narrow path, where one man's force was able to keep down an army.

Sidney.

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps alone defend ourselves.

Shakespeare.

Hast thou not him, and all
Which he calls his, inclosed with a wall
Of strength impregnable?

Sandys.

There the capitol thou see'st,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her citadel Impregnable.

Milton, P. R.

2. Unshaken; unmoved; unaffected; invincible.

The man's affection remains wholly unconcerned and impregnable; just like a rock, which, being plied continually by the waves, still throws them back again, but is not at all moved.

South.

IMPREGNABLY. adv. [from impregnable.] In such a manner as to defy force or hostility.

A castle strongly seated on a high rock, joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impreguably fortified.

Sandys.

To IMPREGNATE. v. a. [in and prægn, Lat.]

1. To fill with young; to make prolific.

Hermaphrodites, although they include the parts of both sexes, cannot impregnate themselves. Brown.

Christianity is of so prolific a nature, so apt to impregnate the hearts and lives of its proselytes, that it is hard to imagine that any branch should want a due fertility.

Decay of Piety.

2. [impregner, Fr.] To fill; to saturate.

To IMPREGNATE. v. n. To become pregnant.

Were they, like Spanish jennets, to impregnate by the winds, they could not have thought on a more proper invention. Addison, Spect. No. 127.

IMPREGNATE. adj. [from the verb.] Impregnated; made prolific.

The soul hereby grows (as it were) big, and impregnate with a temptation. South, Sermon vi. 155.

With native earth their blood the monsters mix'd;
The blood, endu'd with animating heat,
Did in the impregnate earth new sons beget.

Dryden.

IMPREGNATION. n. s. [from impregnate.]

1. The act of making prolific; fecundation.

They ought to refer matters unto counsellors, which is the first begetting or impregnation; but when they are elaborate in the womb of their counsel, and grow ripe to be brought forth, then they take the matter back into their own hands.

Bacon.

2. That with which any thing is impregnated.

What could implant in the body such peculiar impregnations, as should have such power?

Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. [Impregnation, Fr.] Saturation.

Ainsworth.

IMPREJUDICATE. adj. [in, præ, and judico, Lat.] Unprejudiced; not prepossessed; impartial.

Brown.

IMPREPARATION. adj. [in and preparation.] Unpreparedness; want of preparation.

Impreparation and unreadiness when they find in us, they turn it to the soothing up of themselves.

Hooker.

It is our infidelity, our impreparation, that makes death any other than advantage.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE. adj. [old French, imprescriptible.] Without the compass of prescription; by no length of time to be aliened or lost. Such is Colgrave's translation of imprescriptible. Coles gives the same definition of the word as an English one, Dict. 1685. It therefore is not modern in our language; though perhaps it was little regarded, till the late French democratical revolutionists had appended their's to words, the true import of which they grossly violated, "the rights of men and citizens." It appears to have been forgotten, when Johnson compiled his dictionary.

The end of every political association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man.

Nares, Rev. of the Fr. Decl., &c. Ess. (1810.) ii. 156.

To IMPRESS. v. a. [impresser, old Fr. to print; impressum, Lat.]

The conquering chief his foot impress'd
On the strong neck of that destructive beast.

Dryden, Ovid.

2. To fix deep.

We should dwell upon the arguments, and impress the motives of persuasion upon our own hearts, till we feel the force of them.

Watts.

3. To mark; as impressed by a stamp.

So foul and ugly, that exceeding fair

Their visages impress'd, when they approached near.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. To force into service. This is generally now spoken and written press.

[His] age has charms in it, [his] title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes
Which do command them. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Burnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.

— That will never be;

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare.

Ormond should contribute all he could for the making those levies of men, and for impressing of ships. Clarendon.

IMPRESS. v. t. [from the verb.] Dr. Johnson places the accent on the last syllable, according to the ancient pronunciation; but it is now most frequently placed on the first.]

1. Mark made by pressure.

This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

They having taken the impresses of the insides of these shells with that exquisite niceness, as to express even the finest lineaments of them.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Effects of one substance on another.

How objects are represented to myself I cannot be ignorant; but in what manner they are received, and what impresses they make upon the differing organs of another, he only knows that feels them.

Glauville, Scopsis.

3. Mark of distinction; stamp.

God, surveying the works of the creation, leaves us this general impress or character upon them, that they were exceeding good.

South.

4. Device; motto. [impresa, Italian. And so our own word was formerly written either impresa or imprese.]

Impresas, and devices rare,
Of all her gallant knights.

Peacham, Min. Brit. (1612).

A gulling imprese for you at tilt.

Imblazon'd shields,

Impresses quaint, caparisons and steeds.

Milton, P. L.

5. Act of forcing any into service; compulsion; seizure. Now commonly press. Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Your ships are not well mann'd;

Your mariners are multiteers, reapers, people

Ingrost by swift impress.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Impression; image fixed in the mind.

That he should give himself up to meer inconsiderate imaginations, and casual impresses, chusing them for his guide, because they are the strongest, not truest!

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653.) p. 243.

IMPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from impressible.] Capability of being impressed.

They [blue eyes] are sure signs of a tender impressibility, and sympathising disposition.

IMPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and pressum, Lat.] That may be impressed.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, are plebeian notions.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

IMPRE'SSION. n. s. [impressio, Lat.; impression, Fr.]

1. The act of pressing one body upon another.

Sensation is such an impression or motion, made in some part of the body, as produces some perception in the understanding.

Locke.

2. Mark made by pressure; stamp.
Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Image fixed in the mind.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies, they would not make a due impression on the mind.

Alterbury.

The false representations of the kingdom's enemies had made some impression in the mind of the successor.

Swift.

4. Efficacious agency; operation; influence.

The king had made him high sheriff of Sussex, that he might the better make impression upon that county.

Clarendon.

We lie open to the impressions of flattery, which we admit without scruple, because we think we deserve it.

Alterbury.

Universal gravitation is above all mechanism, and proceeds from a divine energy and impression.

Bentley.

There is a real knowledge of material things, when the thing itself, and the real action and impression thereof on our senses, is perceived.

Cheyne.

5. Effect of an attack.

Such a defeat of near two hundred horse, seconded with two thousand foot, may surely endure a comparison with any of the bravest impressions in ancient times.

Wolton.

6. Edition; number printed at once; one course of printing.

To be distracted with many opinions, makes men to be of the last impression, and full of change.

Bacon.

For ten impressions, which his works have had in so many years, at present a hundred books are scarcely purchased once a twelvemonth.

Dryden.

IMPRE'SSIVE.* adj. [from impress.]

1. Capable of being impressed; susceptible.

A soft and impressive fancy.

Spencer on Prodigies, (1665.) p. 75.

Dryden, Progr. of Satire.

IMPRO'PER. adj. [impropre, Fr. impro-prius, Lat.]

1. Not well adapted; unqualified.

As every science requires a peculiar genius, so likewise there is a genius peculiarly improper for every one. Burnet.

2. Unfit; not conducive to the right end.
The methods used in an original disease would be very improper in a gouty case.

Arbutnot on Diet.

3. Not just; not accurate.

He disappear'd, was rarify'd;

For 'tis improper speech to say he dy'd:

He was exhal'd.

Dryden.

IMPRO'PERLY. adv. [from improper.]

1. Not truly; incongruously.

2. Not justly; not accurately.

Improperly we measure life by breath;

Such do not truly live who merit death.

not fit it should pass by parliament; the better, being matter of grace, to impropriate the thanks to himself. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A supercilious tyranny, impropriating the spirit of God to themselves.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

The magistrate is wont to ingross and impropriate this scripture to himself. Hales, Rem. p. 130.

2. To put the possessions of the church into the hands of laicks.

Those impropriated livings, which have now no settled endowment, and are therefore called not vicarages, but perpetual or sometimes arbitrary curacies; they are such, as belonged formerly to those orders who could serve the cure of them in their own persons, as the canons regular of the order of St. Austin; which being afterwards developed into the hands of laymen, they hired pro-curates to serve them, at the cheapest rate they could.

Wharton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, (1699), p. 67.

IMPRO'PRIATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Developed into the hands of laick.

Mrs. Gulston being possessed of the impropriate priation* of all divine knowledge.

Loe, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614), p. 29.

2. Alienation of the possessions of the church.

An impropriation is properly so called when the church land is in the hands of a layman; and an appropriation is when it is in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, though sometimes these terms are confounded. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Having an impropriation in his estate, he took a course to dispose of it for the augmentation of the vicarage. Spelman.

IMPROPRIATOR. n. s. [from impropriate.]

1. One who seizes to himself.

I should condemn any man for a most unconscionable incloser and impropriator, that should take upon himself to give another leave to speak or write this or the like, which is as common for every one as the air which we breathe.

Dean Martin's Letters, (1662), p. 23.

2. A layman that has the possession of the lands of the church.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPROPRI'ETY. n. s. [impropriété, Fr. from improprius, Lat. Anciently our word was impropriety; as property was also used for propriety. "Improperly, when a word is brought into the talke having nothing at al his owne proper signification." Sherrye, &c. fol. vi. b.] Unfitness; unsuitableness; inaccuracy; want of justness.

These mighty ones, whose ambition could suffer them to be called gods, would never be flattered into immortality; but the proudest have been convinced of the impropriety of that appellation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Many gross improprieties, however authorised by practice, ought to be discarded. Swift.

IMPROSPER'ITY.* n. s. [in and prosperity.]

Unhappiness.

Since the improsperous voyage we begun.

Dryden, Æn.

IMPRO'SPEROUSLY. adv. [from improsperous.] Unhappily; unluckily; unsuccessfully; with ill fortune.

Thus like a rose by some unkindly blast,
'Mongst many buds that round about it grow,
The withering leaves improsperously do cast,
Whilst all the rest their sovereign beauties shew:
Amidst this goodly sisterhood even so,
Nipt with cold death untimely did I fade.

Drayton, Legend of Matilda.

This experiment has been but very improsperously attempted. Boyle.

IMPRO'SPEROUSNESS.* n. s. [from improperous.] Unhappiness; ill fortune.

That the improsperousness, ruin, perhaps of a whole kingdom, should be imputable to one such sin. Hammond, Works, iv. 513.

The effect of these threatenings of God we daily see in the strange improsperousness of ill gotten estates. Whole Duty of Man, xii. § 19.

IMPROVABILITY.* n. s. [from improvable.]
Capability of improvement.

IMPROVABLE. adj. [from improve.] Capable of being advanced from a good to a better state; capable of melioration.

Adventures in knowledge are laudable, and the essays of weaker heads afford improvable hints unto better. Brown.

We have stock enough, and that too of so improvable a nature, that is, capable of infinite advancement. Decay of Piety.

Man is accommodated with moral principles, improvable by the exercise of his faculties.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Animals are not improvable beyond their proper genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

I have a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already planting woods and draining marshes.

Addison, Spect.

IMPROVABLENESS. n. s. [from improvable.]
Capableness of being made better.

Of the improvableness of attrition into contrition.

Hammond, Works, i. 479.

IMPROVABLY. adv. [from improvable.] In a manner that admits of melioration.

TO IMPROVE. v. a. [in and probus :
"Quasi probum facere." Skinner.]

1. To advance any thing nearer to perfection; to raise from good to better.
We amend a bad, but improve a good thing. Dr. Johnson. — But it is also used in the general meaning of augmentation, without any reference to perfection.
See the next sense.

I love not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead. Denham.

Heaven seems improv'd with a superior ray,
And the bright arch reflects a double day. Pope.

2. To augment; to increase. Not noticed by any of our lexicographers.

Some unhappy suits in law, and waste of his fortune in those suits, made some impression upon his mind, which being improved by domestic afflictions, and those indulgences to himself which naturally attend those afflictions, rendered his age less revered than his youth had been.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 32.

This ill principle, which being thus habitually improved, and from personal corruptions spreading into general and national, is the cause of all the mischiefs and disorders, publick and private, which trouble and infest the world, is to be altered and corrected only by discipline. South, Serm. v. 17.

3. [In and prove; improver, Fr. improbo, Latin.] To disprove; to censure. Now disused.

Though the prophet Jeremy was unjustly accused, yet doth not that improve any thing that I have said. Whitgift.

TO IMPROVE. v. n. To advance in goodness.

We take care to improve in our frugality and diligence; virtues which become us, particularly in times of war. Atterbury.

IMPROVEMENT.† n. s. [from improve. Norm. Fr. improvement.]

1. Melioration; advancement of any thing from good to better.

Some virtues tend to the preservation of health, and others to the improvement and security of estates. Tillotson.

2. Act of improving; something added or changed for the better: sometimes with on.

The parts of Sinon, Camilla, and some few others, are improvements on the Greek poet. Addison, Spect.

3. Progress from good to better.

There is a design of publishing the history of architecture, with its several improvements and decays. Addison.

4. Progress in any respect; encrease.

When the corruption of men's manners, by the habitual improvement of this vicious principle, comes from personal to be general and universal, so as to diffuse and spread itself over a whole community; it naturally and directly tends to the ruin and subversion of the government, where it so prevails. South, Sermon v. 17.

5. Instruction; edification.

I look upon your city as the best place of improvement: from the school we go to the university, but from the universities to London. South.

6. Effect of melioration.

Love is the greatest of human affections, and friendship the noblest and most refined improvement of love. South.

IMPROVER. n. s. [from improve.]

1. One that makes himself or any thing else better.

They were the greatest improvers of those qualifications with which courts used to be adorned. Clarendon.

The first started ideas have been examined, and many effectually confuted by the late improvers of this way. Locke.

Homer is like a skillful improver, who places a beautiful statue so as to answer several vistas. Pope.

2. Any thing that meliorates.

Chalk is a very great improver of most lands. Mortimer.

IMPROVIDED. adj. [improvisus, Lat. imprevu, Fr.] Unforeseen; unexpected; unprovided against.

She suborned hath
This crafty messenger with letters vain,
To work new woe, and improvided scath,
By breaking off the band betwixt us twin. Spenser.

IMPROVIDENCE. n. s. [from improvident.]

Want of forethought; want of caution.
Men would escape floods by running up to mountains; and though some might perish through improvidence, many would escape. Hale.

The improvidence of my neighbour must not make me inhuman. L'Estrange.

IMPROVIDENT. adj. [improvidus, Lat.] Wanting forecast; wanting care to provide.

Improvident soldiers, had your watch been good, This sudden mischief never could have fall'n. Shakspeare.

When men well have fed, the blood being warm,
Then are they most improvident of harm. Daniel.

I shall conclude this digression, and return to the time when that brisk and improvident resolution was taken. Clarendon.

This were an improvident revenge in the young ones, whereby they must destroy themselves. Brown.

IMPROVIDENTLY.† adv. [from improvident.] Without forethought; without care.

Distracted in her course, improvidently rash. Drayton, Polyol. S. 12.

Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Improvidently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd, and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty. Donne, Poems, p. 120.

We, in the stupidity of atheistical hearts, are so improvidently covetous. Hammond, Works, iv. 674.

IMPROVISION. n. s. [in and provision.] Want of forethought.

Her improvision would be justly accusable. Brown.

IMPRUDENCE.† n. s. [imprudencia, French, imprudencia, Lat.] Want of prudence; indiscretion; negligence; inattention to interest.

Where good with bad were match'd, who of themselves

Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milton, P. L.

IMPRUDENT. adj. [imprudens, French, imprudens, Lat.] Wanting prudence; injudicious; indiscreet; negligent.

There is no such imprudent person as he that neglects God and his soul. Tillotson.

IMPRUDENTLY.* adv. [from imprudent.] Without prudence; indiscreetly. Sherwood.

IMPUDENCE.† n. s. [impudencia, French, impudencia, Lat.] "Impudence in an Englishman is sullen and insolent; in a Scotchman it is untractable and rapacious; in an Irishman, absurd and fawning." Spect. No. 20. Shamelessness; immodesty.

I ne'er heard yet
That any of these bolder virtues wanted
Less impudence to gain say what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare, Winter Tale.
A woman, if she maintain her husband, is full of anger, impudency, and much reproach. Eccles. xxv. 22.

Nor did Noah's infirmity justify Cham's impudency, or exempt him for that curse of being servant of servants. King Charles.

Those clear truths, that either their own evidence forces us to admit, or common-experience makes it impudence to deny. Locke.

IMPUDENT. adj. [impudent, Fr. impudens, Lat.]

1. Shameless; wanting modesty.
It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sawciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

When we behold an angel, not to fear,
Is to be impudent. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Unchaste; immodest.

IMPUDENTLY. adv. [from impudent.] Shamelessly; without modesty.

At once assail
With open mouths, and impudently rail. Sandys.
Why should soft Fabius impudently bear
Names gain'd by conquest in the Gallick war?
Why lays he claim to Hercules his strain,
Yet dares be base, effeminate, and vain? Dryden.

IMPUDICITY.* n. s. [impudicitia, Fr. impudicitia, Lat.] Immodesty.

They are so unacquainted with Rome's impurities and impudicities.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616), p. 18.
That usual pride, levity, or impudicity, which they observed or suspected in many.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 115.
TO IMPUGN.† v. a. [impugnare, Fr. impugno, Lat.] To attack; to assault by law or argument: to oppose; to resist.

You say, that in the old church the truth of this mystery was never impugned openly. Alp. Crammer, Answer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 203.

To knights of great emprise
The charge of Justice given was in trust,
That they might execute her judgments wise,
And with their might beat down licentious Lust,
Which proudly did impugne her sentence just. Spenser, F. Q.

Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Wise and careful commanders do not only cast how to impugne, oppress, and annoy an enemy, but also how to remove those helps which might be advantageous to him in his siege. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 248.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peachment on Drawing.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness; and that not only in matters of moment and business, but also of recreation, which is impugned by some, though better defended by others. South.

IMPUGNATION.* n. s. [from impugn. Fr. impugnacion.] Opposition; resistance.

The fifth is a perpetual impugnacion, and self-conflict; either part labouring to oppose and vanquish the other. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 18.

IMPUGNER.† n. s. [from impugn.] One that attacks or invades.

To defend them from the pretended slanders of their impugnors. Fulke against Allen, (1586), p. 354.

Leaving excuseless those his wilful impugnors. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

IMPUISSANCE. n. s. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.

As he would not trust Ferdinand and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impuissance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon, Hen. VII.

IMPULSE.† n. s. [impulsus, Lat.] Formerly the accent was on the last syllable; it is now constantly on the first.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impressed.

Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.
IMPULSION.† n. s. [impulsion, French, impulsus, Lat.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The first beginning of all those motions, so moved by others, can be nothing else but only the impulsion of that one first Mover, which moveth of himself. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 225.

Influences, impulsions, or inclinations, — from the lights above. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

My keeper with compassion mov'd to see,
How grief's impulsions in my breast did beat,
Thus silence broke. Mir. for Mag. p. 652.

But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infest our foes. Mil. S. A.
He always opposed, upon the impulsion of conscience, all mutations in the church. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 97.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellant.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion
Against their proper course. Denham, Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.
IMPULSIVE.* n. s. Impellant cause or reason.

Notwithstanding all which motives and impulsives, Sir Thomas Overbury refused to be sent abroad. Wotton, Rem. p. 409.

IMPULSIVELY.* adv. [from impulsive.] By impulse.

The two ladies seemed much affected, and impulsively at the same time they both put their hands into their pockets. Sterne.

IMPUNIBLY.* adv. [from impunity.] Without punishment.

Xenophon represents the opinion of Socrates, that — no man impunibly violates a law established by the gods. Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 65.

IMPUNITY. n. s. [impunité, Fr. impunitas, Lat.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison, Freeholder.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their illgoten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPURE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Lat.] 1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.
2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austere!ly talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Milton, P. L.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquaintance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakspeare.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent: foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

TO IMPURE.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To render foul or impure; to defile.
That other imundation scoured the world, this impures it. Bp. Hall, Serm. Works, ii. 269.

IMPURELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.

IMPURENESS.† n. s. [impureté, Fr. impurity.] } puritas, Lat. from impure.]

1. Want of sanctity; want of holiness.
The soul of a man grown to an inward and real impurity. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. B. 2. ch. 6.

The act of a substantial impureness committed. Ibid.

2. Act of unchastity.
Foul impurities reigned among the monkish clergy. Atterbury, Serm.

3. Base admixture.
The impureness of mixed posterity. Feltham, Res. i. 85.

4. Feculent admixture.
Cleanse the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters; the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbuthnot.

TO IMPURPLE.† v. a. [imporporare, Ital. empourprer, Fr. See TO EMPURPLE. But our old lexicography writes it impurple. See Sherwood's Dict.] To make red; to colour as with purple.
Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,

IMPURTABLE.† adj. [from impure.] 1. Chargeable upon any one; that of which one may be accused.

It is rather imputable to that prudent modesty which so much becomes every sober woman.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 163.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in nowise imputable. Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPURTABLENESS. n. s. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPUTATION. n. s. [imputation, Fr. from impute.]

1. Attribution of any thing; generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
If a son that is sent by his father about merchandize, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakspeare.

To use intellections and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville, Scepis.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens, they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enomies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Antonio is a good man.
— Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
— No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

IMPUTATIVE.† adj. [from impute.] That may impute.

In all things righteousness, acceptance, or sanctification, is free and imputative.
Tr. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 1052.

The fourth is the imputative righteousness of Christ, either exploded or not rightly understood. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull.

IMPUTATIVELY.* adv. [from imputative.] By imputation; attributively.

Sarah made choice of a slave, rather than a free woman, to bring to her husband's bed, that the child, which the slave might happen to bear, might imputatively, at least, be accounted hers. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 3. ch. 1.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, Fr. imputo, Lat.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom. iv. 22.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived, for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is hapless takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon, Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.
This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to Lord Bathurst, called a Dissertation on Parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds.
Milton, P. L.

IMPU'TER.† n. s. [from impute.] One that imputes. Sherwood.

IN.† prep. [in, Lat. in, Sax. in, Gothick.] 1. Noting the place where anything is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.

Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel, Civil Wars.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakespeare.

Sir Edmond Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakespeare.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant, is great. Daniel, Civil Wars.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smalbridge, Serm.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Dunciad.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds
the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

5. Noting proportion.

Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.

I cannot but lament the common course, which,
at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.

6. According to.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Collier.

7. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said in it. Locke.

8. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shaks. Jul. Cæs.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Now in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death revenged. Dryden.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shakespeare.

10. Formerly in the sense of on; which was a common usage, and continued in Milton's time. Wicliffe and Chaucer so use it.

But she againe him in the shield did smite.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 16.

And in his necke
Her proud foot setting. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 40.

All who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory. Milton, P. L. iii. 448.

11. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakespeare.

12. In as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.

IN. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacredst bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

I fear me, you'll be in till then. Shakespeare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:

We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.
These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in? Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakespeare.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
— Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in; follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Winds.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryden.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm? Collier.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

7. IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. IN before r is changed into r; as irregular;
before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABILITY. n. s. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to inure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended, and what plea we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INABSTINENCE. n. s. [in and abstinence.]
Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milton, P. L.

INABUSIVELY.* adv. [in and abusively.]
Without abuse.

A state of mortality shall always want that infinite wisdom, and purity of intention which resideth in the Deity, and which makes power to consist inabusively only there, as in its proper sphere.

Ld. North, Light in the Way to Paradise, (1682,) p. 91.

INACCESSIBILITY.* n. s. [from inaccess-sible.] State of being inaccessible.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it, nature having supplied that with the inaccessibility of the precipice. Bulwer, Rem. i. 417.

INACCE/SSIBLE. adj. [inaccessible, Fr.
in and accessible.] Not to be reached;
not to be approached.

What'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakespeare.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

There shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.

INACCE/SSIBLY.* adv. [from inaccessible.]
So as not to be approached.

Mr. Bryant supposes that this piece of recondite northern mythology was inaccessibly shut up in Spelman, Asser, &c.

INAC/curacy.† n. s. [from inaccurate.]
Want of exactness.

It does not then proceed from any peculiar irregularity, or difficulty of our language, that the general practice, both of speaking and writing it, is chargeable with inaccuracy. Lowth.

[There are] two small inaccuracies in this sentence. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 512.

INAC/curate.† adj. [in and accurate.]

Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

The expression is plainly inaccurate.
Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 315.

Leland is also inaccurate at least, in representing the edition by Thynne as coming next after that by Caxton. Tyrwhitt on Chaucer.

INAC/curately.* adv. [from inaccurate.]
Not correctly.

What may be used as an argument? Why, either the allegorical persons, or the beauty they have in such compositions. Very inaccurately expressed, take it which way you will. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 273.

INAC/ction.† n. s. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present:
I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

Ferments of the worst kind succeed to perfect inaction.
Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, § 38.
INACTIVE.† adj. [in and active.]

1. Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

His [Rowe's] plays are musical and pleasing poems; but inactive and unmoving tragedies.

Others are—doomed to lose four months in inactive obscurity. Johnson, Rambler, No. 124.

2. Unfavourable to activity.

Not the vain visions of inactive schools,
 Not fancy's maxims, not opinion's rules,
 E'er form'd the man, whose gen'rous warmth extends

T' enrich his country. Shenstone.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.]. Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. s. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
 Is inactivity at best. Swift.

TO INACTUATE.* v. a. [from actuate.]
 To put into action.

The plastic in them is too highly awakened, to inactuate only an aerial body.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 125.

INACTUATION.* n. s. [from inactuate.] Operation.

They [the creatures] were then constituted in the inactuation and exercise of their noblest and most perfect powers. Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 113.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice

Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
 What farther means can reason now direct?

Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.]
 Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADEQUATENESS.* n. s. [from inadequate.]
 Defect of proportion.

That may be collected generally from the inadequateness of the visible means to most notable productions. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

INADEQUATION.* n. s. [in and adequation.]
 Want of exact correspondence.

The difference only arising from inadequation of languages.

Cit. in Fuller's Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 418.

INADMISSIBLE.* adj. [Fr. inadmissible; an old word in that language; but, in ours, of modern date. Mr. Malone attributes the introduction of it to William Pitt, first Earl of Chatham.] Not to be allowed, or admitted.

It must always be remembered, that bishop Lowth's version is designed for the learned: in one for vulgar use "sorce" for "choice vine," "ilex" for "green oak," &c. would be clearly inadmissible.

Alp. Newcome, Ess. on Bibl. Transl. p. 303.

INADVERTENCE. } n. s. [inadvertence, Fr.
INADVERTENCY. } from inadvertent.

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a difference between them, as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present, that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertence or indiscretion.

Gov. of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.

INADVERTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.]
 Carelessly; negligently.

Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulyssus, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Richardson, Clarissa.

INADVERTISEMENT.* n. s. [in and advertisement.] Inadvertence.

Constant objects lose their hints, and steal an inadvertisement upon us. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

INAFABILITY.* n. s. [from inaffable.]

Reservedness in conversation. Coles.

INAFABLE.* adj. [in and affable.] Reserved; sour; un courteous; unpleasant in conversation. See AFABLE. Scott.

INAFECTATION.* n. s. [in and affection.]
 The state of being void of affection. Scott.

INAFECTEDLY.* adv. [from inaffected.]
 Without affection; "inaffectedly, done carelessly." Not in use. Cockeram.

INAIDABLE.* adj. [from in and aïd.]
 Not to be assisted.

Labouring art can never answer nature
 From her inaïdable estate. Shaks. All's Well.

INALIENABLE.† adj. [inalienable, old Fr.] That cannot be alienated, or granted to another.

This grant or concession was made originally upon condition that the said lands should be inalienable.

Hist. Desc. of the Kingd. of Meccasar, (1701.) p. 88.

It [the land] was not originally inalienable.

Burke, Speech in Parl. (1772.)

INALIENABLENESS.* n. s. [from the adjective.] The state of being inalienable. Scott.

INALIMENTAL. adj. [in and alimental.]
 Affording no nourishment.

Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.

INALTERABLE.* adj. [in and alterable.]
 Not to be changed or altered.

The heavens—being made of an incorruptible and inalterable quintessence.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 75.

INAMIABLE.* adj. [in and amiable.]
 Unpleasant; not to be beloved. Cockeram.

INAMIABLENESS.* n. s. [from inamiable.]
 Unloveliness; the want of amiable qualities. Scott.

INAMISSIBLE.† adj. [inamissible, Fr.; in and amissus, Lat.] Not to be lost.

These advantages are inamissible. Hammond.
 Fixed in an inamissible happiness.

Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 68.

INAMISSIBLENESS.* n. s. [from inamissible.]
 The state of being inamissible. Scott.

INAMORATO.* n. s. [Ital. innamorato.]
 One in love. See ENAMORADO. It appears to have once had the English form of inamorate; for thus Cockeram gives it, in his old vocabulary, "inamorate, lovers." But inamorato has kept its ground down to our own times. It is usually a contemptuous expression.

Perfum'd inamoratoes!

Marston, Scourge of Villany, (1599.) iii. 10.
 All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all inamoratoes. Tatler, No. 27.

Distracted inamoratos, or spiritual or sensual. Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Methodists, vol. i. p. 57.

We are both worshippers and inamoratos of this mother of the gods, antiquity.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 199.

INA'NE. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void. It is used licentiously for a substantive.

We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.

TO INANIMATE.† v. a. [in and animo, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. This word is not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the poetical passage from Donne. Donne, however, was fond of the word.

There's a kind of world remaining still;
 Though she, which did inanimate and fill
 The world, be gone, yet in this last long night
 Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light. Donne, Poems, p. 204.

This child of mine, inanimated by your gracious acceptance. Donne, Devot. Epist. Dedic.

Youth is their critical day, that judges them, that denominates them, that inanimates and informs them. Donne, Devot. p. 338.

INA'NIMATE. } adj. [inanimatus, Latin;
INANIMATED. } inanimé, French.] Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon.

The golden goddess, present at the prayer,
 Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
 And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.

Both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimated part of the universe.

Cheyne, Philos. Princip.

From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
 And leave inanimate the naked wall,
 Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.

INANIMATION.* n. s. [from To inanimate.]
 Animation. Not usual.

We may well consider the body, before the soul came, before inanimation, to be without sin. Donne, Devot. p. 581.

INANI'TION.† n. s. [inani'tion, Fr. inanis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fullness in the vessels of the animal.

Repletion and inani'tion may both do harm in two contrary extremes.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fullness in the beginning, and too great inani'tion in the latter end of the disease.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

INA'NITY.† n. s. [inanité, Fr. inaninis, Lat.]
1. Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inaninity, and admits no vacuities, but so little ones as nobody whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide.

Digby on Bodies.

2. Vanity.

These fopperies are the chief of the effect.—
Their inanity gives them weight and credit.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 42.

INA'PPETENCE.* n. s. [in and appetence.]
Want of appetite.

Some squeamish and disrelished person takes a long walk to the physician's lodging to beg some remedy for his inappetence.

Boyle against Custom. Swear. p. 106.

INA'PPETENCY.† n. s. [in and appetentia, Lat.] Want of stomach or appetite.

Sherwood.

INAPPLICABLE.adj. [in and applicable.]
Not to be put to a particular use.

Unfitness for the particular purpose.

INAPPLICATIO.n. s. [inapplication, Fr. in and application.] Indolence; negligence.

INA'POSITE.* adj. [in and opposite.] Ill placed; ill timed; not to the purpose.

INAPPREHENSIBLE.* adj. [in and apprehensible.] Not intelligible.

Those celestial songs to others inapprehensible, but not to those who were not defiled with women.

Milton, Apol. for Sinecismyrmus.

INAPPREHENSIVE.* adj. [in and apprehensive.] Not noticing; regardless.

By faring deliciously every day men become senseless of the evils of mankind, inapprehensive of the troubles of their brethren, unconcerned in the changes of the world, and the cries of the poor, the hunger of the fatherless, and the thirst of widows.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1653), p. 206.

INA'PTITUDE.* n. s. [in and aptitude.]
Unfitness.

Herby one may give a strong conjecture of the aptness or inaptitude of one's capacity to that study.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1619), i. i. 9.

INA'QUATE.* adj. [in and aquatus, Lat.] Embodied in water. Not in use.

For as much as he is joyed to the bread but sacramentally, there followeth no impanation thereof, no more than the Holy Ghost is inaquate, that is to say, made water, beying sacramentally joyed to the water in baptism.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 368.

INAQUATION.* n. s. [from inaquate.] The state of being inaquate.

The second reason is almost as fondly handled, alluding from impanation to inaquation.

Bp. Gardiner, Repl. to Abp. Cranmer, p. 369.

INARABLE.adj. [in and arabilis, Latin.] Not capable of tillage.

Dict.

To INAR'CH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined, the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding.

VOL. II.

Miller.

INARTICULATE.adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters.

Willins, Math. Magic.

By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, does in churches.

Dryden.

INARTICULATELY.† adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

Whispered *inarticulate*ly in our hearts.

Hammond, Works, iv. 497.

INARTICULATENESS. n. s. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTICULATION.* n. s. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; indistinctness in pronouncing.

The oracles seemed to be obscure: but then it was by the ambiguity of the expression, and not by the inarticulation of the words.

Ld. Chesterfield.

INARTIFICIAL.† adj. [in and artificial.]

1. Contrary to art.

I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also.

Decay of Piety.

2. Not made by art; plain; simple; artless; rude.

It was the inartificial process of the experiment, and not the acuteness of any commentary upon it, which they have had in veneration.

Sprat, Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 91.

Words of such amazing force and comprehension, [St. Matt. vi. 6—9.] and at the same time of such a wonderful and inartificial simplicity, as must convince the most hardened infidel, would he give himself leave thoroughly to attend to them, of that divine spirit and wisdom, by which the author of them most unquestionably spake.

Conventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. i.

If poetry be compared with painting, in respect of this its merely natural and inartificial resemblance.

Harris on Music, Poetry, &c. iii. § 2.

Petty barbarian states, intent only on repelling their neighbours or enlarging their territories, unfurnished with arts or letters, and, from their natural ferocity, cherishing the most violent jealousies, and destitute of the principles of mutual confidence, possessed no other mode of adjusting their differences, and securing their frontiers, than to construct these inartificial bulwarks, serving at once for division and defence, planned on the simplest mechanism, and executed by the mere strength of tumultuary multitudes.

Warren, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 64.

INARTIFICIALLY.adv. [from inartificial.]
Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when it is affected by those of a self-denying profession.

Collier.

INATTENTION. n. s. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect; heedlessness.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproofs of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect.

Rogers.

We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect.

Rogers.

Novel lays attract our ravish'd ears;

But old, the mind with inattention bears.

Pope.

INATTENTIVE.adj. [in and attentive.] Heedless; careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit.

Watts.

INATTENTIVELY.* adv. [from inattentive.]
Without attention; heedlessly.

INAU'DIBLE.adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;

For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time

Steals, ere we can effect them.

Shakespeare.

To INAU'GURATE.† v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

Those beginnings of years were very propitious unto him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the times as of the will.

Wolton, Life of D. of Buck.

He had taken with him Alfred, his youngest son, to be there inaugurated.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

INAU'GURATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Invested with office.

Edmond —

At London caus'd himself inaugurate to be.

Hammond, Works, iv. 529.

INAUGURATION. n. s. [inauguration, Fr.; inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.

The royal olive was solemnly sworn at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable.

Howell, Voc. For.

At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INAU'GURATORY.* adj. [from inaugurate.] Respecting inauguration.

After so many inauguratory gratulations, nuptial hymns, and funeral dirges, he must be highly favoured by nature, or by fortune, who says any thing not said before.

Johnson, Life of Dryden.

INAURATION. n. s. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours.

Arbutnot on Coins.

INAUSPICATE.* adj. [in and auspicate.] See TO AUSPICATE.] Ill omened.

Though it bore an inauspicate face, it proved of a friendly event.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 43.

INAUSPICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here

I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Though Heaven's inauspicious eye

Lay black on love's nativity,

Her eye a strong appeal can give;

Beauty, smiles, and love shall live. Crashaw.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain

Purs'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;

She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair.

Dryden.

Carew's Poems, p. 79.

Let others carve the rest; it shall suffice,
I on thy grave this epitaph incise. Ibid., p. 104.
Nor had his love to any (had not stone
And stocks discover'd it,) been ever known;
Which, (for on them he us'd his plaints t' incise,)
By chance presented it to Sylvia's eyes.

Sherburn, Transl. from St. Amant.

INCI'SED. adj. [inciser, Fr. incisus, Latin.]
Cut; made by cutting: as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together.

Wiseman, Surgery.

INCI'SION. n. s. [incision, Fr. incisio, Lat.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgion.

Let us make incision for your love,

To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

Shakespeare.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakespeare, As you like it.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterion is a scouring off, or incision of viscus humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen. Bacon.

INCI'SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors.

Boyle.

INCI'SOR.† n. s. [incisor, Lat.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

The incisors of the upper jaw are larger and broader than those of the lower.

Berdmore on the Teeth.

INCI'SORY. adj. [incisoire, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCI'SURE. n. s. [incisura, Lat.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food. Derham.

INCITATION.† n. s. [incitatio, Lat.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

After that Dionise, by their incitation, had expelled Plato out of Sicily, they abandoned their habits and severity. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 139.

He was satisfied, that Sarah's motion proceeded not merely from her anger, but from a divine incitation. Patrick on Genes. xxi. 12.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto configuity, an union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

Gov. of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Decay of Piety.

TO INCI'TE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shaks.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Shakspeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCI'TEMENT.† n. s. [old French, incitement.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

Let his actions speak him; and this shield,
Let down from heaven, that to his youth will yield
Such copy of incitement. B. Jonson, Masq. at Court.

Harbly seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope, Stat.

INCI'TER.* n. s. [from incite.] An inciting cause; that which encourages.

They held it as an inciter of lust.

Feltham, Res. ii. 36.

All this which I have depainted to thee, are inciters and rousers of my mind.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iii. 6.

INCI'VIL. adj. [incivil, Fr.] Unpolished. See INCI'VIL.

INCI'VILITY. n. s. [incivilité, Fr.; in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility. Vilkinson.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called incivilities and incivilities.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

INCI'VILLY.* adv. [from incivil.] Rudely. See INCI'VILLY.

TO INCLASP.* v. a. [from clasp.] To hold fast; to clasp.

He inclasped the whole world within his outstretched arms; his soul is as wide as the whole universe. Cudworth, Sermon. p. 65.

INCLAVATED.* adj. [in and clavatus, Lat.] Set; fast fixed.

These [teeth] are more firmly inclavated, and infixed into the jaw bones, by treble or quadruple roots. Smith on Old Age, (1666), p. 81.

INCL'EMENTY. n. s. [inclemente, Fr.; inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclementy some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryd.

INCL'EMENT. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.] Unmerciful; un pitying; void of tenderness; harsh. I is used of tender of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
The inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow. Milton, P. L.

I stand

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Lat.]

1. Having a propensity of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition; with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best.

Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,

Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton, P. L.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINA'TION.† n. s. [inclinaison, inclination, Fr.; inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton, Opticks.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law. South.

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Flexion; the act of bowing. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

There was a pleasant arbor, not by art
But of the trees owne inclination made. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 44.

To sit, doth not [here] signify any peculiar inclination or flexion, any determinate location or position, of the body. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

7. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

It was found to be this very inclination to the axis of the earth; and proportionably, though not equally, answering to the degrees of latitude.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 282.

8. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some vessels or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

Quincy.

INCLINATORY.† adj. [from inclinare.]

1. Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclination virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Applied to the magnetical needle. See the seventh sense of INCLINATION.

This needle, touched with the stone, and directing towards the north and south, the mariners, as the magnetical philosophers call their directory needle; not only for the reason intimated, but to distinguish it also from their other, called the inclination needle.

Gregory, Posthum. p. 281.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatorily.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To INCLINE.† v. n. [inclino, Lat.; incliner, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part; with to or towards.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Prov. ii. 18.

Still to this place

My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes; Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

Rowe.

2. To bend the body; to bow.

The winged warrior low inclined

At his Creator's feet with reverent due.

Fairfax, Tass. ix. 60.

He, kindly, from his state

Inclined not,

Milton, P. L.

3. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

— He seems indifferent;

Or rather swaying more upon our part.

Shakespeare.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

Judges.

To INCLINE.† v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids.

Milton, P. L.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;

Now to the baron fate inclines the field.

Pope.

A towering structure to the palace join'd;

To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

Pope.

2. To turn towards any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law.

Common Prayer.

Ye have not inclined your ear unto me.

Jerem.

But that from us aught should ascend to heaven

So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,

Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

Milton, P. L.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

An embracing vine,
Whose bunches hanging down seem'd to entice
All passers-by to taste their luscious wine,
And did themselves into their hands incline,
As freely offering to be gathered.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 54.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superiour kind.

Dryden.

INCLINER.* n. s. [from incline.] In dialling, an inclined dial. Dict. of Arts.

To INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp;

to enclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,

Is thine, if thou wilt have't.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To INCLOISTER.† v. a. [enclostrer, Fr. See To ENCLOSE.] To shut up in a cloister.

Such a beatific face

Inclosters here this narrow floor,

That possess all hearts before.

Lovelace's Luc. p. 47.

To INCLOSE.* v. a. [Dr. Johnson takes no notice of this way of writing enclose; which, however, is very common; and which he has often used himself; though certainly enclose is more correct, from its French origin, enclos.] To part from things or grounds common by a fence; to surround; to shut in. See To ENCLOSE.

A garden inclosed is my sister. Cantic. iv. 12.

INCLOSER.* n. s. [from inclose.] One that encloses. See ENCLOSER.

A most unconscionable incloser and improprator.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662,) p. 23.

INCLOSURE.* See ENCLOSURE.

To INCLOUD.† v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

The heavens on everie side encloved be.

Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

In their thick breaths,

Rank of gross diet, shall we be incloved,

And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Shakespeare.

To INCLUDE.† v. a. [include, Lat.]

1. To inclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire lease.

Bacon.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included.

Swift.

INCLUSIO.* n. s. [inclusio, Lat.] The act of including.

INCLUSIVE.† adj. [inclusif, Fr.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,

Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,

From courts inclusive down to cells.

Swift.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differentiated partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To INCOACH.* See To ENCOACH.

INCOACT.* adj. [incoactus, Lat.] Un-
INCOACTED. } constrained. See Co-ACTED. } Bullockar, and Coles.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. s. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on.

Locke.

INCOG.† adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — "Some words are hitherto but fairly split, and therefore only in their way to perfection; as incog, and plenipo; but in a short time, it is to be hoped, they will be further docked to inc, and plen." Tatler, No. 230.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog, Depend upon it, he'll remain incog.

Addison.

INCOGITABLE.* adj. [Lat. incogitabilis.] Unthought of.

The most flagitious, incogitable fact.

Dean King, Sermon. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 31.

INCOGITANCY.† n. s. [incogitantia, Lat.] Want of thought.

It cannot argue any want of judgement in the author, but meer incogitancy only.

Ferrand on Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 112.

Which action, done out of a sudden incogitancy, might pass for but a weakness.

South, Sermon. vii. 211.

One man's fancies are laws to successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption.

Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration

Decay of Piety.

INCOGITANT.* adj. [incogitans, Latin.]

Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

His first example saith, "It is a just law that every one shall peaceably enjoy his estate in lands or otherwise." Does this law attain to no good end? The bar will blush at this most incogitant woodcock.

Milton, Colasterion.

Men are careless and incogitant, and slip into the pit of destruction before they are aware.

Goodman, Wink. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

INCOGITANTLY.* adv. [from incogitant.]

Without consideration.

Some — do not imprudently or incogitantly refer the prayers and fasting to the valediction of Paul and Barnabas.

Anatichull's Annot. Tr. p. 146.

Men almost as often speak incogitantly, as they think silently. Barrow, Sermon. on St. James iii. 2.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.]

Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings.

Locke.

INCOGNITO.† adv. [incognitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — We borrow the term from the Italian incognito; the great men of which country were fond of travelling, or walking about, in disguise.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago

Since gods come down incognito. Prior.

The prince royal of Prussia came thither incognito. Taiter, No. 17.

He designs to stay there incognito a few days.

Bp. Berkeley, Lett. to T. Prior, (1713.)

INCOHERENCE. } n. s. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. } n. s. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass.

Boyle.

2. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the arguments better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHERENT.† adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

3. Not suitable to; not agreeing.

Two incoherent and incombining dispositions.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 10.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.]

Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOLUMITY.† n. s. [incolumité, Fr. incolumitas, Lat.]

Safety; security. A word very little in use.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Howell.

TO INCOMBER.* See TO ENCUMBER, and TO INCUMBER. Barret and Sherwood write it incomber.

TO INCOMBINE.*† v. n. [in and combine.] To differ; not to agree.

To sow the sorrow of man's nativity with seed of two incoherent and incombining dispositions.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 10.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. s. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility.

Ray.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. s. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME.† n. s. [in and come. Sax. incuman, to come in, to enter.]

1. Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who reapest at the plenty of thy neighbourhood, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord.

Dryden, Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade; the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture.

Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferences, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

2. Coming-in; admission; introduction. Not now in use. It was a favourite expression in Cromwell's time.

He that walks up unto that light, and improves that strength, which God hath already communicated unto him, shall have more abundant incomes of light and strength from God.

Bp. Rust, Disc. of Truth, § 17.

Every humour and fantastick unaccountable motion was, by some, represented as the work of that Spirit to which they were most opposite: thus when warm and brisk sanguine presented a cheerful scene, and filled the imagination with pleasant dreams; these were divine illasses, the joys and incomes of the Holy Ghost!

Glanville, Serm. iii. p. 179.

This hath been commonly experimented by the devotees of all religions: for even among the devout Turks and Heathens we may find as notorious instances of those incomes and enlargements, as in any of our modern histories of Christian experiences.

Scott, Works, ii. 129. (edit. 1718.)

INCOMING.* adj. [from income; incuman, Sax.]. Coming in.

It is the first and fundamental interest of the labourer, that the farmer should have a full incoming profit on the product of his labour.

Burke, Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

INCOMMENSURABILITY.† n. s. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

Mr. W. Warner made an inverted logarithmic table, whereas Briggs's table fills his margin with numbers, encreasing by unites, and over-against them sets their logarithms, which, because of incommensurability, must needs be either abundant or deficient. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 579.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, con, and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Lat.]. Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurate to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

INCOMMIXTURE.* n. s. [in and commixture.] The state of being unmixed.

In what parity and incommixture the language of that people stood, which were casually discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, no longer ago than in the time of Duke D'Alva, we have not met with a good account farther than that their words were Basquish or Cantabrian.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 135.

TO INCOMMEDIATE.† v. a. [from TO INCOMMODO, Fr.]. modo, Lat. To be inconvenient to: to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

Neither know I whether is more hard to manage of the two; a dejected estate, or prosperous; whether we may be more incommoded with a resty horse, or with a tired one.

Bp. Hall of Contention, § 2.

Temporal pressures and adversities—may sometimes incommode the man, yet can never reach the saint; and, though they break the casket, can never come at the jewel. South, Serm. vi. 134.

A goat planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMODATION.* n. s. [from incommode.] Inconvenience.

What incommodation is that, after the brisk active heat of the sun in the day-time, to have the variety of the more mild beams of the moon.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682), p. 115.

INCOMMODOMENT.* n. s. [from incommode.] Inconvenience.

I persisted in my ordinary course of living and business, though with severe incommodement.

Cheyne, Eng. Malady, (1733), p. 315.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.]. Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY.† adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

I told how myself had stood so incommodiously by means of the great press, as I heard it not well.

Harington, Br. View of the Ch. (1658), p. 190.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. s. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness.

Burnet.

INCOMMODITY. n. s. [incommodité, Fr. incommoditas, Lat.]. Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser on Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smook. Wotton, Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY.† n. s. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

The incommunicability of this peace with many out of his church. Hales, Rem. p. 181.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. King Charles.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glauville.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Stillingfleet.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reverence to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMUNICABLENESS.* n. s. [from incommunicable.] The state or quality of not being impartible.

As by honouring him, we acknowledge him God, so by the incommunicableness of honour we acknowledge him one God, Mede, Apost. of the Lat. Times, p. 33.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATED.* adj. [in and communicated.] Not imparted.

Excellencies, so far as we know, incommunicated to any creature. More, Antid. against Idol. ch. 2.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgements and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale, Common Law.

INCOMMUTABLE.* adj. [in and commutable.] Unchangeable; not subject to change. Bullockar.

INCOMMUTABILITY.* n. s. [from incommutable.] The state or quality of being unchangeable.

This order, by its own incommutability, keeps all things mutable within their several ranks and conditions, which otherwise would run into confusion. Transl. of Boethius, (Oxf. 1674,) p. 187.

INCOMPACT. adj. [in and compact.]
INCOMPACTED. } Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, and would remain incompact. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were To an untirable and continue goodliness. Shakspeare, Timon.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

INCOMPATIBILITY.† n. s. [incompatibilité, Fr. properly incompatibility, in and competo, Lat. And accordingly Hammond writes it incompatibility.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension: but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

The incompatibility of true faith with carnal desires. Hammond, Works, iv. 604.

INCOMPATIBLE. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompatible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends in the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompatibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. s. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexis, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Gov. of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryd.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS.† n. s. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

He — supplies what her incompleteness went seeking.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. To the Parl.
The incompleteness of our seraphic lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession.

Boyle.

INCOMPLEX.* adj. [in and complex; in-complex, Fr.] Complicated: opposed to simple.

Otherwise it is unintelligible, how any complex thing (as they speak) can be the complete or immediate object of belief. Barrow, Works ii. 55.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. s. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent.

Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God.

Rogers.

INCOMPOSED.† adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Howell. Two of our best poets have finely employed the word.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones.

Howell.

Thus Satan; and him thus the anach old, With faltering speech and visage incomposed, Answer'd.

Milton, P. L. ii. 989.

In the middle droops
The strong laborious ox, of honest front,
Which incomposed he shakes. Thomson, Summer.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. s. [from impossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitness in any modification.

More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INCOMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY.† n. s. [imprehen-sibilité, Fr. from imprehensible.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

The constant, universal sense of all antiquity unanimously confessing an imprehensibility in many of the articles of the Christian faith.

South, Serm. iii. 217.

The plea of difficulty, and even imprehen-sibility, may be urged.

Professor White's Serm. Notes, p. x.

INCOMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [incomprehen-sible, Fr. in and comprehensible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing incomprehensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory.

Hammond.

Stars that seem to roll

Spaces incomprehensible. Milton, P. L.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter.

Locke.

The laws of vegetation, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations.

Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended?

Hooker.

INCOMPREHENSIBLENESS. n. s. [from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibility: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible.

Watts.

INCOMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from incomprehensible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite.

Locke.

INCOMPREHENSION.* n. s. [in and comprehension.] Want of comprehension.

These mazes and incomprehensions.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

INCOMPREHENSIVE.* adj. [in and comprehensive.] Not extensive.

A most incomprehensive and inaccurate title: for this edition, the last and the best, contains the three first as well as the three last books.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iv. 4.

INCOMPRESSIBLE. adj. [incompressible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted.

Cheyne.

INCOMPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCURRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONCEALABLE. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONCEIVABLE. adj. [inconceivable, Fr. in and conceivable.] Unconceivable; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years.

Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure.

Locke.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable.

Newton, Opticks.

INCONCEIVABLENESS.* n. s. [from inconceivable.] The quality or state of being inconceivable.

If any of these ways of attaining salvation seem to some men inconceivable, this very inconceivableness is thought by others a proper character to set out all for mysteries.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 6.

When once this method is known, there is no difficulty or inconceivableness in it, as can reasonably make a wise and considerate man call in question the truth of a well attested revelation, merely upon that account.

Clarke, Evid. of Natural and Rev. Religion.

INCONCEIVABLY. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of those lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable?

South.

INCONCEPTIBLE. adj. [in and conceptive; conceptus, Lat.] Not to be conceived; inconceivable; inconceivable. A word not used.

It is inconceivable how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption, should after be corrupted.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INCONCINNITY.* n. s. [Lat. inconcinnitas.] Unaptness; unsuitableness; disproportion.

Bullocker.

Such is the inconcinnity and insignificance of Grotius's interpreting of the six seals; which is quite otherwise in Mr. Mede.

More, Myst. of Godl. (1660,) p. 184.

INCONCLUDENT. adj. [in and concludens, Lat.] Inferring no consequence.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

INCONCLUDING.* part. adj. [in and conclude.] Exhibiting no powerful argument; inferring no consequence.

Those, which in after ages first denied it, [the creation of the world,] made use of very frivolous and inconcluding arguments, grounding their new opinion upon weak foundations.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.

INCONCLUSIVE.† adj. [in and conclusive.] Not enforcing any determination of the mind; not exhibiting cogent evidence.

The lines in which Lucretius [B. 5. 223.] proposes this objection, are as unphilosophical and inconclusive, as they are highly pathetic and poetical.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

INCONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding.

INCONCLUSIVENESS. n. s. [from inconclusive.] Want of rational cogency.

A man, unskilful in syllogism, at first hearing, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse, whereas some others, better skilled in syllogism, have been misled.

Locke.

INCONCOCT. } adj. [in and concoct.]
INCONCOCTED. } Unripened; immature; not fully digested.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct, and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I understand, remember, and reason better in my riper years than when I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INCONCOCTION. n. s. [from inconcoct.] The state of being indigested; unripeness; immaturity.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called inquinatio, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconect; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

And quaver inharmonious.

Philips.

INCON'DITIONAL. adj. [in and conditional.] Having no exception, limitation, or stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred.

Brown.

INCON'DITIONATE. adj. [in and condition.] Not limited; not restrained by any conditions; absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation.

Boyle.

INCONFO'RMALE.* adj. [in and conform.] Not complying with the practice of others, or with established rules.

Two lecturers they found obstinately inconformable to the king's directions.

Heylin's Life of Abp. Laud, 1671, p. 190.

INCONFO'RMITY.† n. s. [in and conformity.] 1. In compliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue.

Hooker.

2. Refusal to join in the established religion.

Mr. Buckley is sent to the high commission for inconformity. Abp. Laud to K. Ch. I. Hist. p. 531.

INCONFU'SED.* adj. [inconfusus, Lat.] Not confused; distinct.

All the curious diversity of articulate sounds of the voice of man, or birds, will enter into a small cranny inconfused.

Bacon, Nat. Hist. ii. 192.

INCONFU'SION. n. s. [in and confusion.] Distinctness. Not used.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other.

Bacon.

INCONGE'LALE.* adj. [in and congelable.] Not to be frozen.

Cockeram.

INCONGRUENCE. n. s. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity, or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches.

Boyle.

INCONGRUENT.* adj. [in and congruent.] Unsuitable; unfit; inconsistent.

It will be not incongruent to our matter, to shew what profits may be taken by the diligent reading of ancient poets. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 42.

As Saint's spirit and grace gives such power to go beyond the precepts; so it is not incongruent that it should so modify sins in his members to make them venial and not killing, in regard they are not done with a full consent, but with a desire of doing the contrary; of which the Apostle saith thus, Rom. vii. 20. "But if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 130.

INCONGRUITY. n. s. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruous.]

1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them.

Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem.

Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She, whom after what form soe'er we see, Is discord and rude incongruity;

She, she is dead, she's dead.

Donne.

INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr.; in and congruous.]

1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God, as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the Deity.

Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCONGRUOUSLY.† adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unfitly.

Having little to save the irregularity of the construction, but by saying, that Luke varied his form of speech; that is, in plain terms, he writ incongruously; when, in truth, he is acknowledged by all expositors too knowing in the Greek to commit such a solecism. Knatchbull, Annot. Tr. p. 56.

INCONNEXEDLY. adv. [in and connex.] Without any connexion or dependence. Little used.

Others ascribed hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONNEXION.* n. s. [in and connexion.] Want of connexion, or just relation.

Neither need we any better or other proof of the inconnexion of this vow with holy orders, than that of their own Dominicus à Soto.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 10.

INCONSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience. Not used.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls' good.

Spenser on Ireland.

INCONSEQUENCE. n. s. [inconsequence, Fr.; inconsequentia, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with showing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer.

Stillingfleet.

INCONSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illustration from thence deduced inconsequent.

Hakewill on Providence.

Men rest not in false apprehensions, without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONSEQUENTIAL.* adj. [from inconsequent.] Not leading to consequences.

She has sense and ambition; but it is still the sense and ambition of a woman, that is, inconsequential.

Ld. Chesterfield.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant; mean; of little value.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing.

Denham.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest.

L'Estrange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity.

Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable?

Newton, Opticks.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children.

Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered.

Rogers.

INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. s. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive.

Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendour of heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts.

Ray on the Creation.

INCONSIDERACY.* n. s. [from inconsiderate.] Thoughtlessness. This word is modern; the old word was inconsiderancy, as in Cockeram's vocabulary, from considerance.

This is the common effect of the inconsideracy of youth.

Ld. Chesterfield.

INCONSIDERANCE.* See INCONSIDERACY. INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsiderare, Fr.; inconsideratus, Lat.]

1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent; used both of men and things.

When thy inconsiderate hand

Flings ope this casement with my trembling name, Then think this name alive, and that thou thus In it offend'st my genius.

Donne.

If you lament it,

That which now looks like justice will be thought An inconsiderate rashness.

Denham, Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politics.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. Wanting due regard; with of before the subject.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties.

Decay of Piety.

INCONSIDERATELY. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Mariamne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison, Spectator.

INCONSIDERATENESS. n. s. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERATION. † n. s. [from inconsideration, Fr.; in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

Let thy merciful providence so govern all in this sickness, that I never fall into utter darkness, ignorance of Thee, or inconsideration of myself. Donne, Devot. (1625), p. 363.

I am moved to reflect upon two principal inconsiderations; the singularity of some, and the irreverence of almost all. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 141.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Bp. Taylor.

INCONSISTENCE. † n. s. [from inconsistent.]

INCONSISTENCY. † n. s. [from inconsistent.] 1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together. There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity. Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.

If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politics, religion, and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last? Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness. INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.]

1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous; followed by with.

Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations, against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.

Compositions of this nature, when thus restrained, shew that wisdom and virtue are far from being inconsistent with politeness and good humour. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Contrary, so that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.

The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Locke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

INCONSISTENTLY. † adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

A melancholy kind of madness — made him speak distractedly and inconsistently. Spenser on Vulg. Proph. (1665,) p. 109.

These are incontestable proofs of a divine power. Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 140.

INCONTESTABLELY. † adv. [from incontestable.] Indisputably; uncontroversibly.

The main substance and groundwork of the language of the Gospels and Epistles, is incontestably the same with that of the old authentic Grecians. Blackwall, Sac. Class. 1. 201.

The exalted prophecy of Isaiah, which Pope has so successfully verified in an eclogue, that incontestably surpasses the Pollio of Virgil. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

INCONTIGUOUS. adj. [in and contiguous.] Not touching each other; not joined together. They seemed pair of small bracelets, consisting of equally little incontiguous beads. Boyle.

INCONTINENCE. † n. s. [incontinentia, Lat.]

INCONTINENCY. † n. s. [in and continence.] Inability to restrain the appetites; unchastity. The cognizance of her incontinency Is this: she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly. Shakspeare.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree, Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard Of dragon watch with unenchanted eye, To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit From the rash hand of bold incontinence. Milton, Comus.

This is my defence; I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence, And, urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense. Dryden.

The words sine veste Dianem agree better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julias, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.

INCONTINENT. adj. [incontiens, Lat.; in and continent.] Unchaste; indulging unlawful pleasure. In these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. Shakspeare, As you like it.

They plead against the inconvenience, not the unlawfulness of popish apparel; and against the inconvenience, not the unlawfulness, of ceremonies in burial. Hooker.

2. Disadvantage; cause of uneasiness; difficulty.

There is a place upon the top of mount Athos above all clouds of rain, or other inconvenience.

Rulegh, Hist.

Man is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment, and is continually unsecure even of life itself. Tillotson.

The inconvenience of old age makes him incapable of corporal pleasures. Dryden.

Would not quickness of sensation be an inconvenience to an animal, that must lie still where chance has once placed it? Locke.

Consider the disproportion between the worst inconveniences that attends incomppliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of God. Rogers.

We are freed from many inconveniences, and we enjoy several advantages. Atterbury.

The things of another world, being distant, operate but faintly upon us: to remedy this inconvenience, we must frequently revolve their certainty and importance. Atterbury.

TO INCONVENIENCE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To trouble; to put to inconvenience.

It is not the variety of opinions, but our own perverse wills, who think it meet that all should be conceited as ourselves are, which hath so *inconvenient*ed the church. Hales, Rem. p. 49.

INCONVENIENT. adj. [inconvenient, Fr.; in and conveniens, Lat.]

certain.

2. In Scotland it denotes mischievously unlucky; as, he's an inconv fellow.
This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare. Dr. Johnson. — There is no such expression in the north of England as inconv, as Mr. Ritson observes; or in Scotland, as we may gather from Dr.
Jamieson's not noticing the word in his Scottish Dictionary. It is a cant expression, frequent in our old plays, denoting not a mischievously unlucky person, but an accomplished one, in a sneering sense; as we say, a fine fellow!
O' my troth, most sweet jests, most inconv vulgar wit, when it comes so smoothly off.

Shakespeare.

O superdainty canon, vicar inconv!

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

A cockscomb inconv, but that he wants money.

spirituall alteration incorporall.

Bp. Gard. Expl. of Cath. Faith, (1551), fol. 109.

Why dost thou bend thine eye on vacancy,
And with the incorporal air dost hold discourse?

Shakespeare.

Learned men have not resolved us whether light be corporal or incorporal: corporal they say it cannot be, because then it would neither pierce the air, nor solid diaphonous bodies, and yet every day we see the air illighted: incorporal it cannot be, because sometimes it affecteth the sight with offence. Rulegh.

INCORPORA'LITY. n. s. [incorporalité, Fr.;
from incorporal.] Immaterialness; distinctness from body.

INCORPORALLY. adv. [from incorporal.]
Without matter; immaterially.
